CLASS of 1925.

The fleeting shadows of the passing year
Have mingled with the sunshine bright and clear;
E'en as the sunbeams on a summer's day,
Birds seek their nest near some shadowed brook,
Lapping the banks, along its struggling way of strife,
Upon a goal, bent the broadening life,
E're the deep-seated memories of time pass.
Coming its way with treasures the present blend
Having it enshrined within the living present's own
In reflections of the future, be our friend.
Coming e'en as we strive to gain the future worth, —
Known to this a book of memory and growth.

Foreword!

LAST YEAR the Class of 1924 published the first Senior Annual of the Wilmington High School. Because the Class of 1925 has considered the precedent worthy of maintenance and conducive to the welfare of the School, it has produced the "Blue Chick." It is hoped that succeeding classes will continue this custom, and that subsequent Year Books, avoiding the faults of their predecessors, will attain an enviable degree of perfection. The Class of 1925 extends sincere appreciation to the members of the faculty who have sponsored the publication of this book ♪ ♪ ♪

Reminiscences of February Class of 1925

It was a blustering, snowy day in the year 1935. The little town of Greenwich, New Jersey, was Christmassy in aspect and its main street, King, lay white and deserted save for two young women who came hurrying along in opposite directions, their heads huddled under umbrellas. They were bound to meet. Nearer and nearer they drew until the inevitable happened. The umbrellas clashed and down went the women.

"Of all the stupid things," came from one feminine throat.

"Really it wasn't my fault," in another exasperated tone.

Soon two heads emerged from the umbrellas and two pairs of eyes stared at each other.

"Why ——— why ——— er ——— could it be———" pondered one.

"Lora Bellslaw, as I'm alive!" shrieked the other. "Lora, surely you haven't forgotten me, Ann, your pal, in the good old days of the Wilmington High School. Don't say you've forgotten ME! Oh, calamities ! ! ! !"

"Ann, Ann Ritzley! is it really you or am I dreaming?" the other said in a dazed voice as she passed a hand across her eyes.

"Yes, it's me (forgetting all about grammar) and you're not dreaming. Come, get up from that wet snow before you catch your death of cold and come home with me where we can have a nice cup of hot tea and incidentally a nice long confab."

"Yes, Ann, now I know it's really you."

Soon the two women were comfortably ensconced on a sofa in the home of Miss Ritzley, history teacher in Jefferson High School, Greenwich, New Jersey. After the tea was served the tongues began to wag and as is sure to happen when every other topic of conversation is exhausted, their thoughts turned back to the days of their high school career.

"Say, Ann," began Lora, "do you remember the day we first entered High School?"

"Will I ever forget it? How it rained and how we were herded in like a flock of sheep, about three hundred children from the various grammar schools?"

"Yes, and how the A1 girls told us about the teachers who flunked everybody and how it was just our luck to get those very ones!"

"Yes, and when we started to go to classes, all the shouts of 'greenies' and 'where's your nurse?' that followed us. We didn't have any student reserves to look after us," in an aggrieved tone.

"We soon got over that though when the acting principal called us into the auditorium and made us welcome to the school," said Lora in a soothing tone.

"But didn't they wish the 90 per cent average on us the very next term?"

"There, there, Ann. What's the matter with you this afternoon? Cheer up, you know we had the elective system to make up for it."

"So we did, and I promise I won't grouch any more."

Here the two young women fell into a thoughtful mood and the room was quiet save for the crackling of the wood on the fireplace. At last with a sigh Lora broke it as she said:

"Ann, it's been a good many years since then, but I'll never forget the thrill I had when I became a sophomore and was moved from the Annex to the Main Building. My, weren't we the high and mighty ones?"

"Well, you might have thought you were, but what happened to me? Why as soon as I stepped out of the door feeling as swelled as puffed rice, who should pass but some smart aleck, and it's been my private opinion that he was a freshie, point his derisive finger at me and shout 'freshman' at the top of his lungs. I can tell you I didn't like that very much," heatedly replied Ann.

"Now, Ann," in a warning tone from Lora, "what about that little promise you just made me. I declare if you don't brighten up, I'm going home." With this she began looking around for her hat and gloves, but Ann swooped upon her and cried, "I'll be good, teacher, I'll be good."

"All right, see that you are."

True to her word this time, Ann cheered up and her tongue began to wag busily and those who are acquainted with her know just what that means. The air became vibrant with the questions and answers hurtling through it and all that was heard was:

"Say, Lora, do you remember that time when we were sophomores and scarlet fever broke out and we didn't have school for over a month?"

"I should say I do, but talking about our sophomore year do you remember that time in Caesar class while some poor girl was struggling along and almost letting Caesar get the best of her, suddenly the superintendent walked in?"

"I guess I'm not likely to forget anything like that and to this day I still wonder how I escaped being called on to recite, for you know my luck."

"Oh the trials and tribulations of Caesar." Here she cast both hands and eyes heavenward. "Just imagine one dead man almost causing the despair and death of so many innocent students. I daresay even today he is doing his best to get rid of some future citizens." This was delivered with an accompaniment of sighs from both the young women.

"And then we were Juniors! Then's when our class began to take on some importance for sure. We weren't merely members of the Wilmington High School, we were Juniors, Undergraduates! No more snubs or patronizing glances for us. We, if you please, were the ones to be condescending now. It was our turn to get even."

"I'll say it was," said Lora, "but WE were beyond such petty and mean tricks. It was our duty to uphold the dignity of the school," in a lofty tone.

"Huh, you're a nice one to talk about dignity, but I'll say this much for you, you always were more dignified than I was or ever will be, I suppose."

"Oh, Ann, do be quiet for a few minutes. I want to ask you a question. Wasn't it in our Junior year that the Traffic Squad was organized?"

"Now that you mention it, I think it was. Didn't the freshies have it fine then? They didn't have to go chasing around the two buildings like we did before we found the room we wanted. Oh well you know the saying, 'The old order changeth.' I wouldn't be surprised to hear some one tell me the Seniors were kow-towing to the freshies."

"Now, Ann, you know. You don't suppose any such thing. Why it would be too terrible. Let me ask you something else. Don't you remember how a few people of our class began to stand out from the others as leaders, some in athletics, others in dramatics and such things."

OUR DIARY

FRESHMAN YEAR, September 1921-September 1922. At last the great day has come! How we have waited for this eventful day! A wee bit awe struck we ventured up the steps and into great silent halls to the auditorium where we were registered. My how proud we were to really belong to Wilmington High School!

During our first few weeks we were busy getting acquainted with our teachers and the new principal, Mr. Coxe. Many unnecessary steps were taken the first week. Lost sheep were never more lost than we.

Our wandering was due to the sorrowful fact that many of the teachers were new and understood no more about the building than we. To add to this calamity we daily had to meet the opposing forces of Sophomores, Juniors, and Seniors, who did not miss the opportunity to yell "Freshie." Oh! the mortification! Such troubles cannot always last even for the most stupid persons, and finally we were able to find our classrooms without the aid of our elders.

It seems that life must have some trials and tribulations in order to be interesting. Just when we thought we were settled some mighty power shattered our peaceful existence by changing the eighty-five percent exemption average to ninety percent, but this burden was lightened by the elective system by which we could at least choose our own road to death.

Our first year was well directed by our chosen officers. The class showed their wisdom by electing Wainwright Dawson, President; Frances Samuel, Vice-President; Eleanor Edge, Secretary; and Samuel Ford, Treasurer, the first term.

The second term was kept alive by the following officers: Oliver Giles, Virginia Arnold, Virginia Turner, and Hugh Holt.

Thus guided, and with the co-operation of each member of the class we were not long in coming into prominence and showing our teachers that some day we would inscribe our names on the annals of High School.

SOPHOMORE YEAR, SEPTEMBER 1922-SEPTEMBER 1923

One year gone, and with it has flown the Freshmen hardships. We now become personages of some notice as we travel through the halls. Indeed our thoughts were centered on our own importance. It seems that this year we were all busy working, so much so that we've had little time for social activities. We were somewhat hindered by the scarlet fever epidemic, which forced us to lose much time and made it necessary for us to concentrate our thoughts on lessons for the first semester.

However, we did enjoy one memorable day. The Sophomores took charge of the Decoration Day program. Every one agreed that the Auditorium was very picturesque. The platform looked a garden of daisies and other flowers. This first participation in school activities proved to be a wonderful success and seemed to be one point scored for the Sophomore Class. A new feature was introduced this term, the Student Council. This organization had for its purpose the promotion of the interest of pupils in the welfare and progress of the school. In this, we took a large part.

JUNIOR YEAR, SEPTEMBER 1923-SEPTEMBER 1924

Oh, Juniors! The year was anticipated with much pleasure. Our social functions began in full array. Thanksgiving Day was the proudest day we had experienced in our High School career. The Seniors rose, while we, wearing white chrysanthemums, marched down the aisle of the Auditorium. The whole program was rendered by the Junior Class. An attractive play, which portrayed "The First Thanksgiving Day," was presented. This day will certainly be remembered by each member of the class as long as he remembers his high school days.

Another very important event was our Junior "Prom." The gymnasium was bright with lights and decorations. Everyone seemed to catch the spirit of joyousness and gayety which was breathed out by the dancers.

This year an aid to puzzled Freshmen and an honorable way for student government was organized when the Traffic Squad came into existence. This worthy body has ever since carried out its plans with the utmost sincerity of purpose. The members have co-operated splendidly with all other organizations in endeavoring to systematize the school.

Perhaps the most important feature of this year was the introduction of a chapter of the National Honor Society. A goodly number of our class was elected to this society. The principles of this society, which were inculcated in every member of our class, if put into practice, would tend to elevate the standards of High School.

SENIOR YEAR, SEPTEMBER, 1924-SEPTEMBER, 1925

How time flies! The goal for which we have been striving is almost reached. Our four years are fast coming to a close; many hearts look sorrowfully toward graduation. Such a busy year! Work, work, work! Working all the time yet hardly completing the necessary lessons! Annuals, Whisps, Senior Essays, Examinations—and forever on!

The Christmas Play which was produced by Seniors was a very clever representation of a "Toy Shop." Reports traveled around school that the Senior girls, dressed as dolls, surely were not much older than the parts they acted. The play was declared to be the best Christmas play ever produced in High School.

An impressive installation of the officers of the Classes and of the officers and members of the Honor Society, Traffic Squad, Friendship Club, Hi-Y Club, Girls Advisory Council, and the Quannacut Club was held in March. This was an experiment which proved extremely successful.

So far the Senior Reception for parents has been the chief event of the year. The teachers, parents, and pupils, met together and passed an extremely enjoyable evening. A program in the auditorium was a pleasing way to begin the entertainment, after this there was a general social time while refreshments were served in the cafeteria.

Much excitement was created and lasted for many days when the rings and pins finally came, after we had waited impatiently for weeks.

Hurrah! We are going to have a Senior "Prom", which we hope will be an interesting and jolly event. We are all going to do our best to have a good time.

There has been great interest shown in our Senior Play, "Beau Brummel." The final cast was selected after many "try-outs."

The Grand Finale! After this, all will be over. Commencement is always a happy time, but cannot help but be overshadowed by the sadness of leaving school. We are all sorry to part from our friends and we wish all the best opportunities and greatest success possible.

Though we leave, there e'er will cleave, those memories dear, of joys lived here

June Class Poem

We love thy name dear Wilmington High,
While in thy walls we're gay and free;
And buoyant youth has not yet solved
Time's dull and untried mystery.

Before us lies the dark, wide world,
And face it boldly now we must;
For Dame Ambition spurs us on—
In her we place our utmost trust.

So we must leave thee, Mater dear,
To enter in that surging throng;
And help, by lending all our powers,
To push this world of ours along.

One last resolve we still would make,
Before we sadly bid good-bye;
Though Wealth or Fame their bounty show,
Our love for thee will never die.

E'en though we stray from thy dear halls,
And lose thy influence noble, pure,
The riches thou to us hast giv'n
Shall ever in our hearts endure.

Ne'er, ne'er shall we forget thy name,
Whatever be the lot we see;
As many years as life shall last,
We still shall love and honor thee.

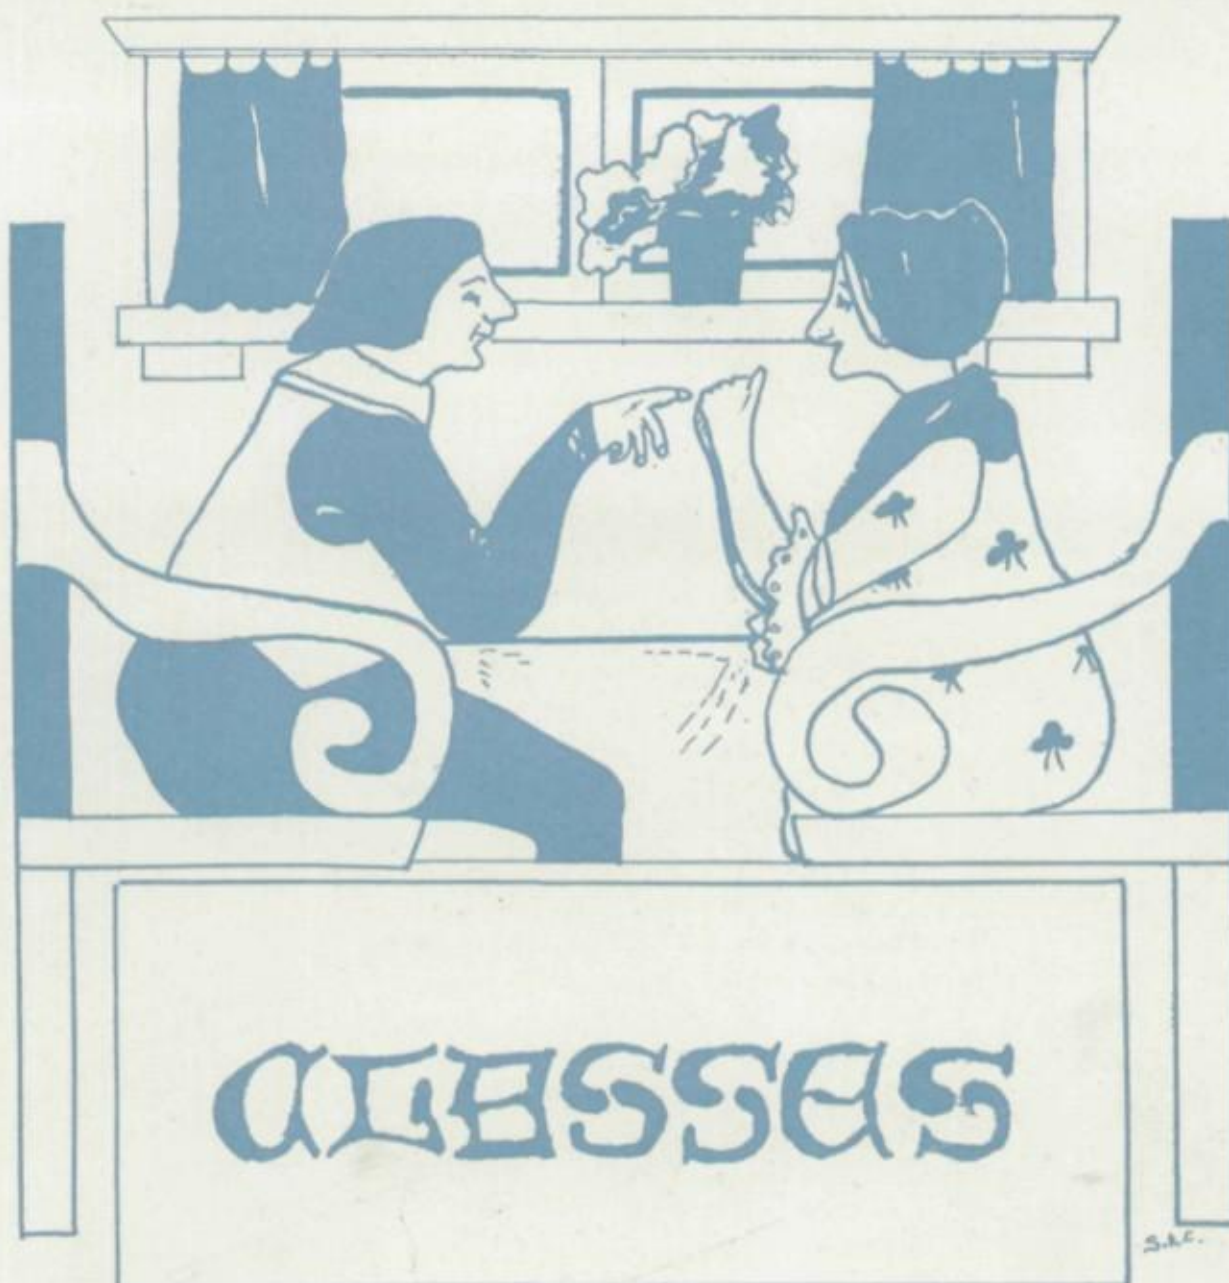

We muse, we dream, our fancies roam;
A host of doubting fears distress,
Have we in all our past four years
Gained every virtue we'd possess?

Ah, no, our gift to thee is small!
Thy gift to us we can't requite;
A guiding star to us thou'st been
To lead from darkness into light.

So soon? But we must leave at last,
For on our play the curtain falls;
And as we part sweet memories
Of former years ring through these halls.

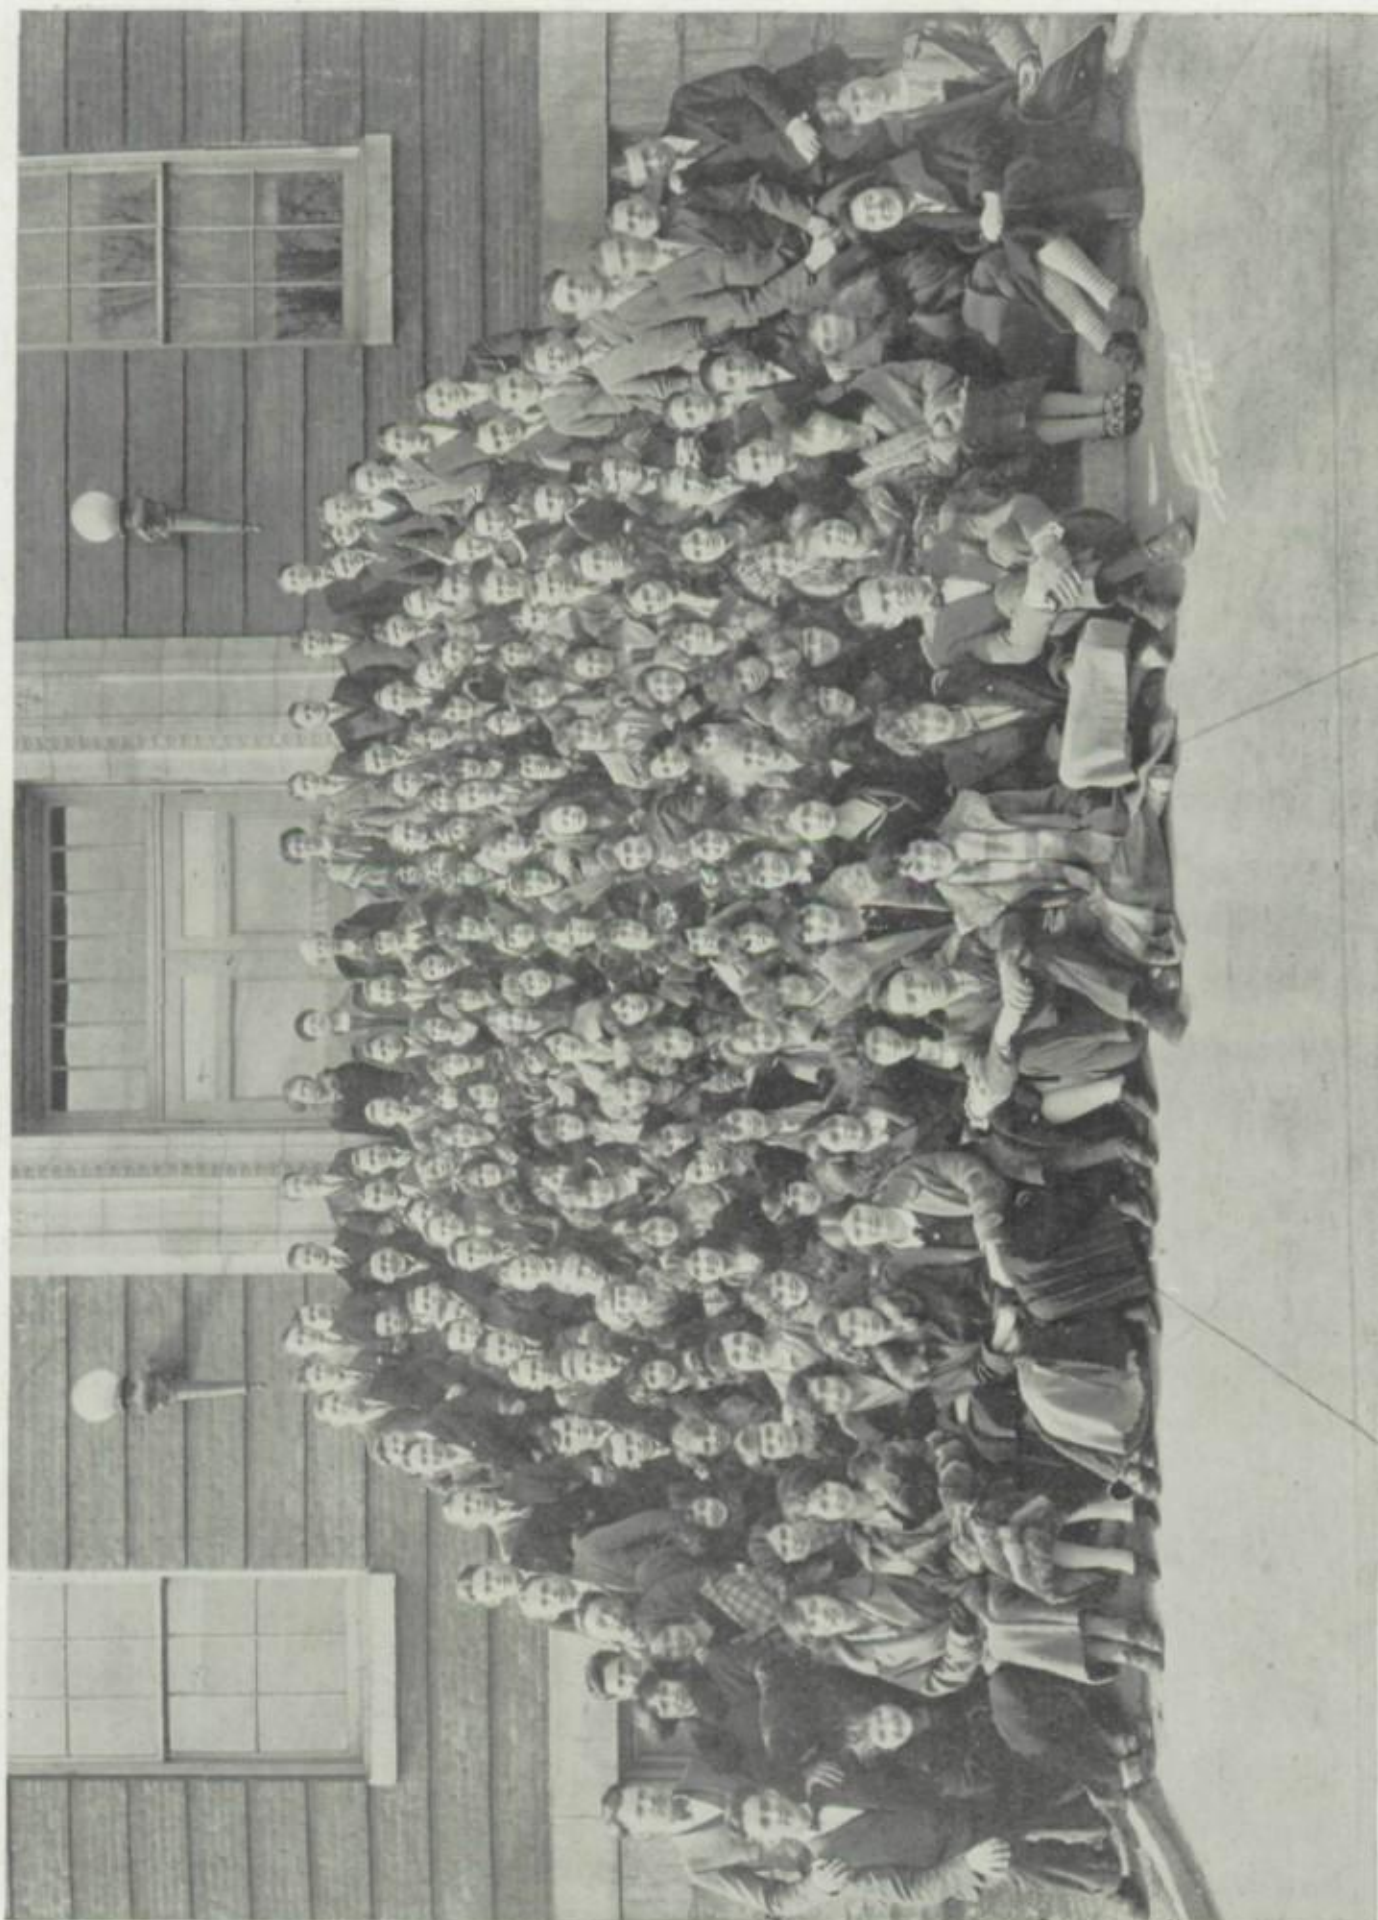

Now, knowing these four years are gone,
Which only love can keep alive—
With grief and love we say farewell—
The class of Nineteen Twenty-Five.

The Junior Class

THE Junior is a typical High School student. If anyone ever enjoyed school life, that person is a Junior. The Freshmen are too green, the Sophomores are too conceited, and the Seniors are too burdened with studies, credits, annuals, farewells, and graduation exercises to find any joy or happiness around school. Therefore, the hypothesis that anyone enjoys life as well as a Junior is untenable and must be disregarded. A unique feature about the Class of June '26 is that they have the only left-handed president, whereas all the other presidents are human beings. Ambitions are high and low in the Junior Class; one member wants to be an aviator; another, a deep-sea diver. One of our number is well on his way to be a statistician. Dealing with cold facts, he finds that every day on the average, he climbs 240 steps. This is going up, not coming down. At this rate, then, he figures that 1200 steps are negotiated in a week, 24,000 in a term, and during his three (?) years at this school, he estimates that he has climbed 144,000 steps. Each step is six inches high, thus he makes a total of 78,000 feet or 14.8 miles in three years. Undoubtedly, there is much promising material among the Juniors, even among the officers. Here's to the Juniors, first in fun, first in trouble, and first in the cafeteria!!

Sophomores

THE other day, two aspiring young aquatic stars, seated on the wall of the "Y" swimming pool, were volubly debating the merits and activities of their respective classes.

"Huh," sneered one, a Junior, "you Sophs are dead. You haven't had a thing all year. Why don't you get together once in a while?"

"Just linger a while," returned the second-year man, "we expect to have some great times this year. Each class is going to have a party, and a big Sophomore 'Prom' to top off with. How's that?"

"Fine, if you can do it," answered the Junior, "but you must have some live wire officers if you expect to get anywhere. Whom have you elected?"

"The lower class have chosen Jack Dougherty, president; Elizabeth Pollard, vice-president; Pearl Lutz, secretary; and Paul Stafford, treasurer."

"Not a bad lot," condescendingly ventured the third-year man. "Whom did the uppers elect?"

"Henry Wood for president," rejoined the yearling, "with Martha Wood for vice-president; Blanche Steptoe, secretary, and Hoyt Ellingsworth, treasurer."

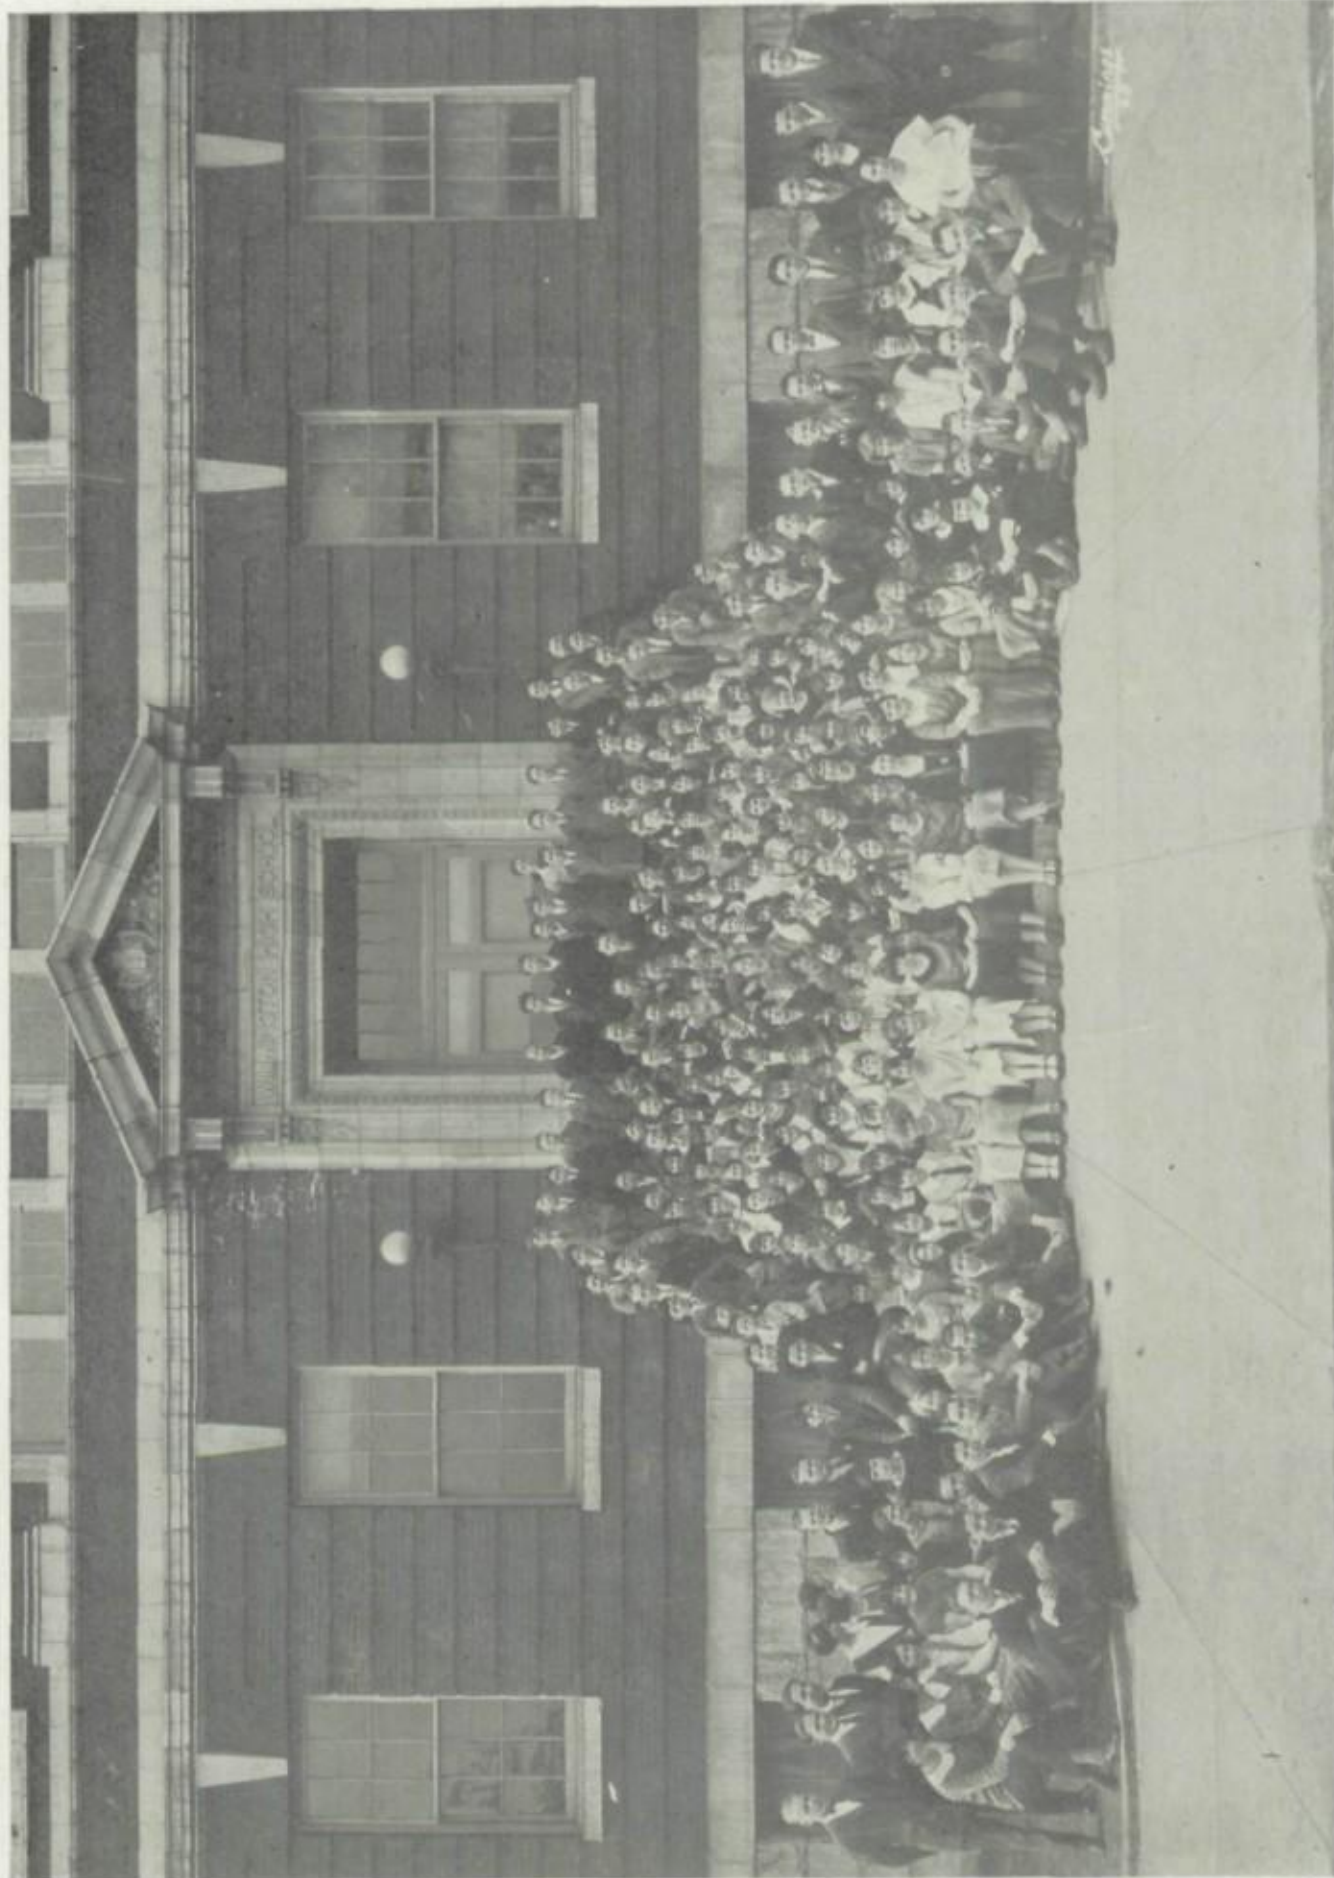

"You should make out first rate for Sophs," patronizingly smiled the Junior. "I wish you luck."

"Much obliged. Just keep an eye on the class of '27," returned the Sophomore, as he disappeared into the green water.

ON THE VALUE OF LATIN.

ONE of the most deplorable tendencies in modern secondary education is the inclination of students to complete their study of Latin with the second year. The first two years of Latin are merely preparatory for advanced work. The real pleasure and benefits of the study of Latin come in the third and fourth years.

It is conceded by men of erudition that no subject lends more to the general culture of a man than Latin. A knowledge of Latin is essential to a good education. Latin is far-reaching in its effect. A large percentage of the words in the English language are derived from the Latin. It is an important factor in the nomenclature of all sciences. A knowledge of its grammar and inflections provides one a basis for the study of other languages. Finally, Latin stimulates an interest in the customs and history of the people of the most powerful and majestic empire the world has ever known, Rome the Eternal.

The third year of Latin consists in the study of Cicero and his orations. With the exception of Demosthenes, Cicero was the greatest orator of all time. Students of Cicero read his orations against Cataline, the Conspirator. These orations are as interesting as a novel. There is a definite plot. One is often tempted to translate ahead of assignments, to discover how Cicero deals with the insidious plots of the treacherous Cataline.

The period of Cicero was very full of excitement and interest. It ended in the overthrow of the Republic and the establishment of the Empire. After one has studied Cicero's orations against the Catalinarian conspirators, and on behalf of the poet Archias, he feels a personal interest and admiration for the man, and reads with much sorrow about the malicious and cruel pursuit and the beheading of the aged Cicero by the forces of Antony.

Vergil is the crowning glory of a four-year Latin course. The "Aeneidos," or "Wanderings of Aeneas," is read. Juno, stung by the offense of a Trojan, determines to take revenge on Troy. To do this, she enlists the support of the Olympian dieties, with the exception of Venus, the mother of Aeneas, a Trojan hero. Aeneas awakes one night to find Troy in flames, and at the mercy of the Greeks. He, with a band of companions, sets sail for Italy, upon the advice of the gods. The Trojan fleet is tossed by the wrath of Juno on the shores of Dido's kingdom, in northern Africa. Dido falls in love with Aeneas. When he leaves her, she commits suicide. This episode is undoubtedly the most famous love story of all literature. Finally, after a journey through the underworld, and after many wars, Aeneas achieves his goal, and is translated to the gods.

Vergil's meter, choice of words, and alliterative lines cannot fail to stir up appreciation. His knowledge of human nature, of philosophy and of natural history, as revealed in the Aeneid, is astonishing.

The fourth year is completed by a reading of Ovid. Ovid is light-hearted, optimistic and may be read almost at sight. His "Metamorphoses," in themselves afford one a very good knowledge of ancient mythology.

Few who have taken four years of Latin have regretted it. Latin is one of the most enjoyable courses one could take, and we sincerely hope that the members of the Class of 1925 will unhesitatingly recommend four years of Latin to any one who might ask their advice on the matter.

"The Last Court"

*Where is that court
Whose judgment of mankind,
Can matter much?*

AS the last day of June broke bright and clear over the eastern horizon of Fairfield, a slender ray of its Auroral splendor thrust itself boldly through the tiny opening in the cell wall of the county jail. All was deathly quiet within and without save the occasional rumbling in the distance of some old wagon which faded off into silence again as abruptly as it had come from it. Fairfield slept late this morning, a habit that seems to be chronic with small country towns.

There was one man though to whom sleep held out no rest nor any hope. He sat alone, on the hardwood bench of his cell, his head buried in his cold and trembling hands. He had looked up slowly and half frightened as the sunlight steadily crept into the gloom and chill of his narrow quarters. It sent a little chill running down his spine—a little ache to his heart—a little touch of horror to his brain. His head throbbed and ached till it seemed he would go mad. But no—there still was hope. This might not be his last sunrise—this might not be his last day of life.

Paul sprang to his feet and jumping upon a little three-legged stool in the corner which also served as a table, pressed his face against the narrow window in the wall.

Beyond lay the low rolling foot hills. A mantle of deep rich green had settled on all the country-side, studded as it seemed only here and there by some blossoming orchard of apple or peach, or some broad expanse of clover and daisy. A light spring dew lay sparkling on everything giving that touch of freshness and beauty that brings to us each time the world as if new born, though full grown with all the attributes and softness of time.

As Paul saw all these things—life seemed dear, dearer it seemed than ever before. A tear rolled down his fevered cheek and a little sigh swelled at his breast. There lay the world of freedom—of happiness, before his very eyes—it was his—why should he be caged here like a captured bird waiting to—to die—to suffer at the hands of his own mankind? Had it not all been his once—but then—the jury had said, "Guilty!" How he hated that word. He knew he was innocent and then they called him "Guilty!" He remembered—the judge had said, "The circumstances are accusive—" they had said he must die—today, yes, today was the day. "Oh"—here he burst out frantically, "I didn't do it—I didn't do it—I tell you—I did not kill him—oh, why doesn't someone believe me—oh, God—God——"

He threw himself on his cot sobbing like a little child and muttering half audibly, "Where is God—can there be a God, can there be a God——?"

At promptly nine o'clock as had been the habit for the past several days, the warden marched methodically down the resounding corridor to Paul's cell, whereupon opening the iron door with his ponderous key, he just as methodically and without a word, pushed in a tray lightly laden with the usual black coffee and stale bread.

On this particular morning, however, Father Dolan arrived simultaneously with the morning meal. It had been his habit usually to stop in about two in the afternoon—but today at two in the afternoon, it was to be over—that was the hour that Paul was to "hang by the neck until dead"—as the court had decreed, unless—yes,

THE VALUE OF LIFE

On with the frolic, full bright is the day,
Let us be jolly, happy, and gay.
On with the music; aloud beat the drum,
O, buoy our spirits with your rum-te-tum-tum.
For as sure as you're born and the sun's in the sky,
You will not always have Youth in your eye.

Pass round the tankards, a toast from each one,
Let us be merry, abandoned to fun,
Out to the meadows, inhale the cool breeze,
Enjoy the sweet comfort, the fragrance and ease,
For as sure as you're born and the sun's in the sky,
You will not always have Youth in your eye.

Be thou not laggard, to charity blind,
But be thou succoring to brother mankind;
Spurn paltry riches; O love and win love,
And hallow thy spirit in Heaven above,
For as sure as you're born and the sun's in the sky,
You will not always have Youth in your eye.

O, gentle maiden, so blythe and so fair,
Why dost thou always thy love-fate despair?
This is the Springtime; the bright month of May,
The time to caper, to sing and to play,
For as sure as you're born and the sun's in the sky,
You will not always have Youth in your eye.

DISILLUSION

Twice have I sat
Cold and silent
And watched the dim ghosts
Stalk through the ruins
Of my fallen Dream Houses.
Now I am tired, too tired to build
Again——

—Dorothy L. Drew.

IN BLOSSOM TIME

I wandered in an orchard old
Where gentle winds were blowing,
And saw the pearly cherry trees
Their petals downward snowing.
'O stay, sweet blossoms!' cried I then,
'Withhold your wasteful showers—
Why will you scatter thus and fade,
You dainty cherry-flowers?
As when in some fond dream we see
Those die which most we cherish,
So when we love you best, alas,
You flutter down and perish!'

The Total Solar Eclipse of January, 1925

WE gave a sigh of relief as our train pulled out of the Grand Central Terminal, for the morning of the total eclipse of the sun had dawned bright and clear, in spite of adverse predictions. There, hanging low in the east, shone the solar disc, sullen and red through the misty veil of New York's atmosphere. It was intensely cold. To view the partial phases of the eclipse from the warm interior of the car as we sped northward into the area of totality was ideal. We watched eagerly through our smoked glass plates. A slight depression on the northeastern limb of the sun marked the beginning of the celestial drama.

Slowly, almost imperceptibly the moon crept over the radiant face of day. By the time we reached our destination, Tarrytown, only a narrow crescent remained of the sun. The light had begun to fail. Quickly I crossed the little bridge that traverses the railroad tracks, near the station, and walked out upon the ice of the river. The picturesque Highlands of the Hudson, clad with evergreens, rose in the west.

Soon a silvery dusk fell upon the earth. Shadows assumed fantastic edgings and unearthly proportions. An atmosphere of mystery and uneasiness pervaded everything under the influence of the unusual darkness. The light was not the light of sunset, nor of dawn. It was weird and ghostlike, a twilight that seemed to portend a cataclysmatic evil. In the midst of day, the sun, source of all the attributes of life was failing, dying!

It grew darker and darker. The temperature fell; the biting coldness stung to the bone. Quivering rows of spectral shadows crept everywhere. The distant hills were veiled with hues of violet and gold. A mist of pale colors gathered in the southwest. Three planets—Mercury, Jupiter and Venus—glowed softly in the heavens. A sudden darkening in the west! With an awe inspiring sweep, the great shadow of the moon had engulfed the earth. The dusk of the gods had come! A flash as of molten metal leaped from the moon's black rim! Then, sublime and resplendent, flared the dazzling majesty of the solar corona! It crowned the awful blackness of the lunar orb with a silvery halo. With high-powered binoculars two faint scarlet prominences could be discerned on the lower limb of the sun, swirling tongues of incandescent hydrogen, calcium and helium vapors, which rose thousands of miles into space. Nothing was heard through the still and clear air but the deliberate counting off of seconds, and a clicking of instruments, accompanied by flashings of magnesium from an adjacent group of astronomers.

The corona, pure and serene, gleamed for sixty-four seconds. With a flash, it vanished. The great shadow swept away. Again, for a few brief moments the ghostly shadow bands crept over the snow. The stars melted into the growing light. The moon began its slow and stately retrogression. At half past ten the partial phase ended. The eclipse belonged to the past.

The Rose of Gold

BUDDHA was walking in the garden. It was sunset, and the whole wide world lay at his feet. The white-robed priests bowed low in adoration. The dwarf pines whispered softly as he passed, and the goldfish hid beneath the lily leaves. The very flowers bowed low their brilliant heads. Buddha was walking in the garden. The world was at peace. But as he passed within the temple he heard a soft rustle in the garden just behind.

Turning, he saw a most bewildering sight. A golden "saisei-rose" had dared to open; dared to unfold its lustrous petals in the presence of Buddha! The petals of every flower in that garden shook with suppressed excitement, trembled with fear.

And Buddha waxed angry. But seeing the golden beauty try to reclose its heavy petals, he became compassionate and said: "O beauteous flower of heaven, thou hast a bravery few men possess. I now give thee life immortal until in thy wanderings over the face of the earth thou dost meet one braver than thyself."

And Buddha passed on into the temple, followed by his priests; and, as the last priest turned to close the great bronze door, he looked. And lo, the rose was gone! And many later, saw the rose—great generals going forward to do battle; proud mothers dying for their own; and even once a beggar, who died to save another. But none were brave enough. The rose passed on.

* * * * *

Beneath a great overhanging crag, with a shining pool of purple iris before it, was a temple. And the name—The House Built in the Sky. Within the temple was a shrine; without, a garden. And the guardian of it all was a pale priest with a worn face, the face of a student and a thinker. All day long he walked or sat in the garden; prayed or read one of the many volumes that he treasured as his own.

As a youth he had heard the legend of the Rose of Gold; had heard and marvelled. The tale lingered in his mind and became his only thought. And one day he conceived the idea of becoming a priest, a follower of Buddha.

While he studied he received a humble pittance from the government, enough to buy the books that he desired, books telling of the wanderings of the Rose.

When he had finished his studies he received his first duty, that of acolyte, in this little temple. Later he became a priest and was happy. The Great Lord Buddha had lived, and prayed, and held his court, in the very room in which he prayed. And it was commonly believed that the Golden Rose had grown in this very garden in which he walked. At one time he had gladly extended hospitality to guests and parties of tourists, for the money that they brought. It was a poor little temple. But now he had in his library every book ever written upon the wanderings of the Rose, and he avoided guests or strangers.

At dawn he would rise and ring the great bronze bell that hung near the gate. He grew all that he needed, even to a few tea bushes. Therefore he had to work part of the morning. Before noon, according to the old rule, he ate a little rice, fruit, or vegetables, never meat, and only once a day. Aside from this he had only one other duty, that of watching and tending the great golden statue of the Lord Buddha which was in the shrine. Aside from this he spent the day in reading, and praying, reading of the Golden Rose.

There is a definite feeling associated with every temple of every faith. That of this "House Built in the Sky" was one of serenity—utter serenity. But beneath this outward calm was a seething anxiety, anxiety in the soul of the priest for the Golden Rose!

All summer long he stayed up in the temple among the books and flowers; but, when the flowers and the butterflies, which are in reality flowers that have lost their roots, had fled and dancing white feathers hid the valley, he went down into the great world. Each year he hired a substitute to come up from the valley and remain in the temple for the winter months, during which neither tourist nor visitor dared try to ascend the mountain.

The last day he would prepare a great feast and take it before the massive golden statue of Buddha with its mysterious smile, praying and fasting all day long. At sunset he bade his fellow priest "good-bye" and started on for his search, the search for the Golden Rose!

This was his sixteenth journey, and, as he walked down the path of flat stones he turned for a last glimpse of the statue. Only a faint glint of gold could be seen. It reminded him of the Rose. He smiled and hurried on. As he passed the great embossed bronze bell, the wind blew through it, and it gently moaned a cry of peace and contentment. He crossed and raised the huge hammer, sending a mighty peal across the valley, perhaps to announce his coming. Then he passed on through the spacious eaved gateway with its corners curved up to send the demons spinning into the air when they attempted to perch. Down, down, down, into the world and to the Rose, he went. He questioned many. Some smiled, but others understood. Once he saw it in a shop, only to have it disappear. Again he heard of it in a nearby town, only again to be deceived. At last the winter was nearly over. He must return to his temple on the mountain! But suddenly news came to him of the Rose, positive news! A mendicant priest had seen it in Tibet! Should he go or return to the temple? He battled all night long under the silent heavens, and at dawn set out for Tibet. He walked many, many miles and reached at last the town of his destination. He was exhausted and could not find a lodging. The town was strange, but at last he found the woman who had the Rose. It had again disappeared!

Disconsolate, he set out for the temple. His time was short, and it was necessary to hasten. His substitute had been hired for only two days longer, and he yet had many miles to go. He was set upon by bandits in a mountain pass and left as dead. He was delayed a whole month before he finally reached the little village beneath the temple. There he was told that he had been given up as lost by his fellow priest, who had locked the great temple gate and departed two weeks before.

In his pocket the weary traveler had only three "yen", enough to buy food to place before the golden statue on the mountain top. No offering had been made for two weeks to the Great Lord Buddha.

As he climbed the hill, deep in the pine, maple and cryptomeria of early spring he decided never again to go out in search of the Rose. His duty was above, in the temple. Even now he feared the wrath of the God. He hurried on and on, up and up, between tree trunks, like columns in the aisle of a church. It began to snow a little, the fine beautiful snow of a Japanese print. Then it began to snow steadily, a snow that penetrated through his thin cloak and reminded him of his great hunger. He had not eaten for five days; nor did he think to eat of the meagre supply upon his back. At places steps were missing, and he had to use his hands, clutching, clawing, blinded by the snow. For the first time he realized the significance of the grave-stones that climbed up with him. The pack of food grew heavy, and he sat down upon the

Dramatic Club—First Semester

Dramatic Club—Second Semester

The Dramatic Club

THE Dramatic Club, organized by Mrs. Wentz, held its first meeting December 23, 1920. Several plays were given by the club. The next year it was under the direction of Miss Barthold. Two years later when Miss Mildred Lillard came to the school, it was placed under her direction.

The club has progressed rapidly. It has a membership chosen from the most talented Juniors and Seniors of the High School. The members are chosen by competition. Membership does not exceed fifty.

The Dramatic Club decided to give one-act plays monthly under student direction. The purpose of these productions is to aid the students in ways other than acting, that is to develop directors—people whose executive powers would be utilized to the greatest extent. Aside from this committees on production—scenery, costume, property and lighting, are under no faculty supervision and therefore develop a sense of responsibility in the chairmen.

Only two one-act plays were given this term because of the abundance of extra-curricular activities. The first one, "The Ghost Story", by Booth Tarkington, was directed by Frances Samuel. It has been repeated several times. The second one, "Op o' my Thumb," a play in which Maud Adams had starred, was directed by Janet Brady.

The annual play was "Peg o' My Heart", by J. Hartly Manners. The appeal of the play is universal, the appeal of the whimsical and natural. In the hands of the Dramatic Club cast it did not suffer.

Shakespeare Club

The Shakespeare Club

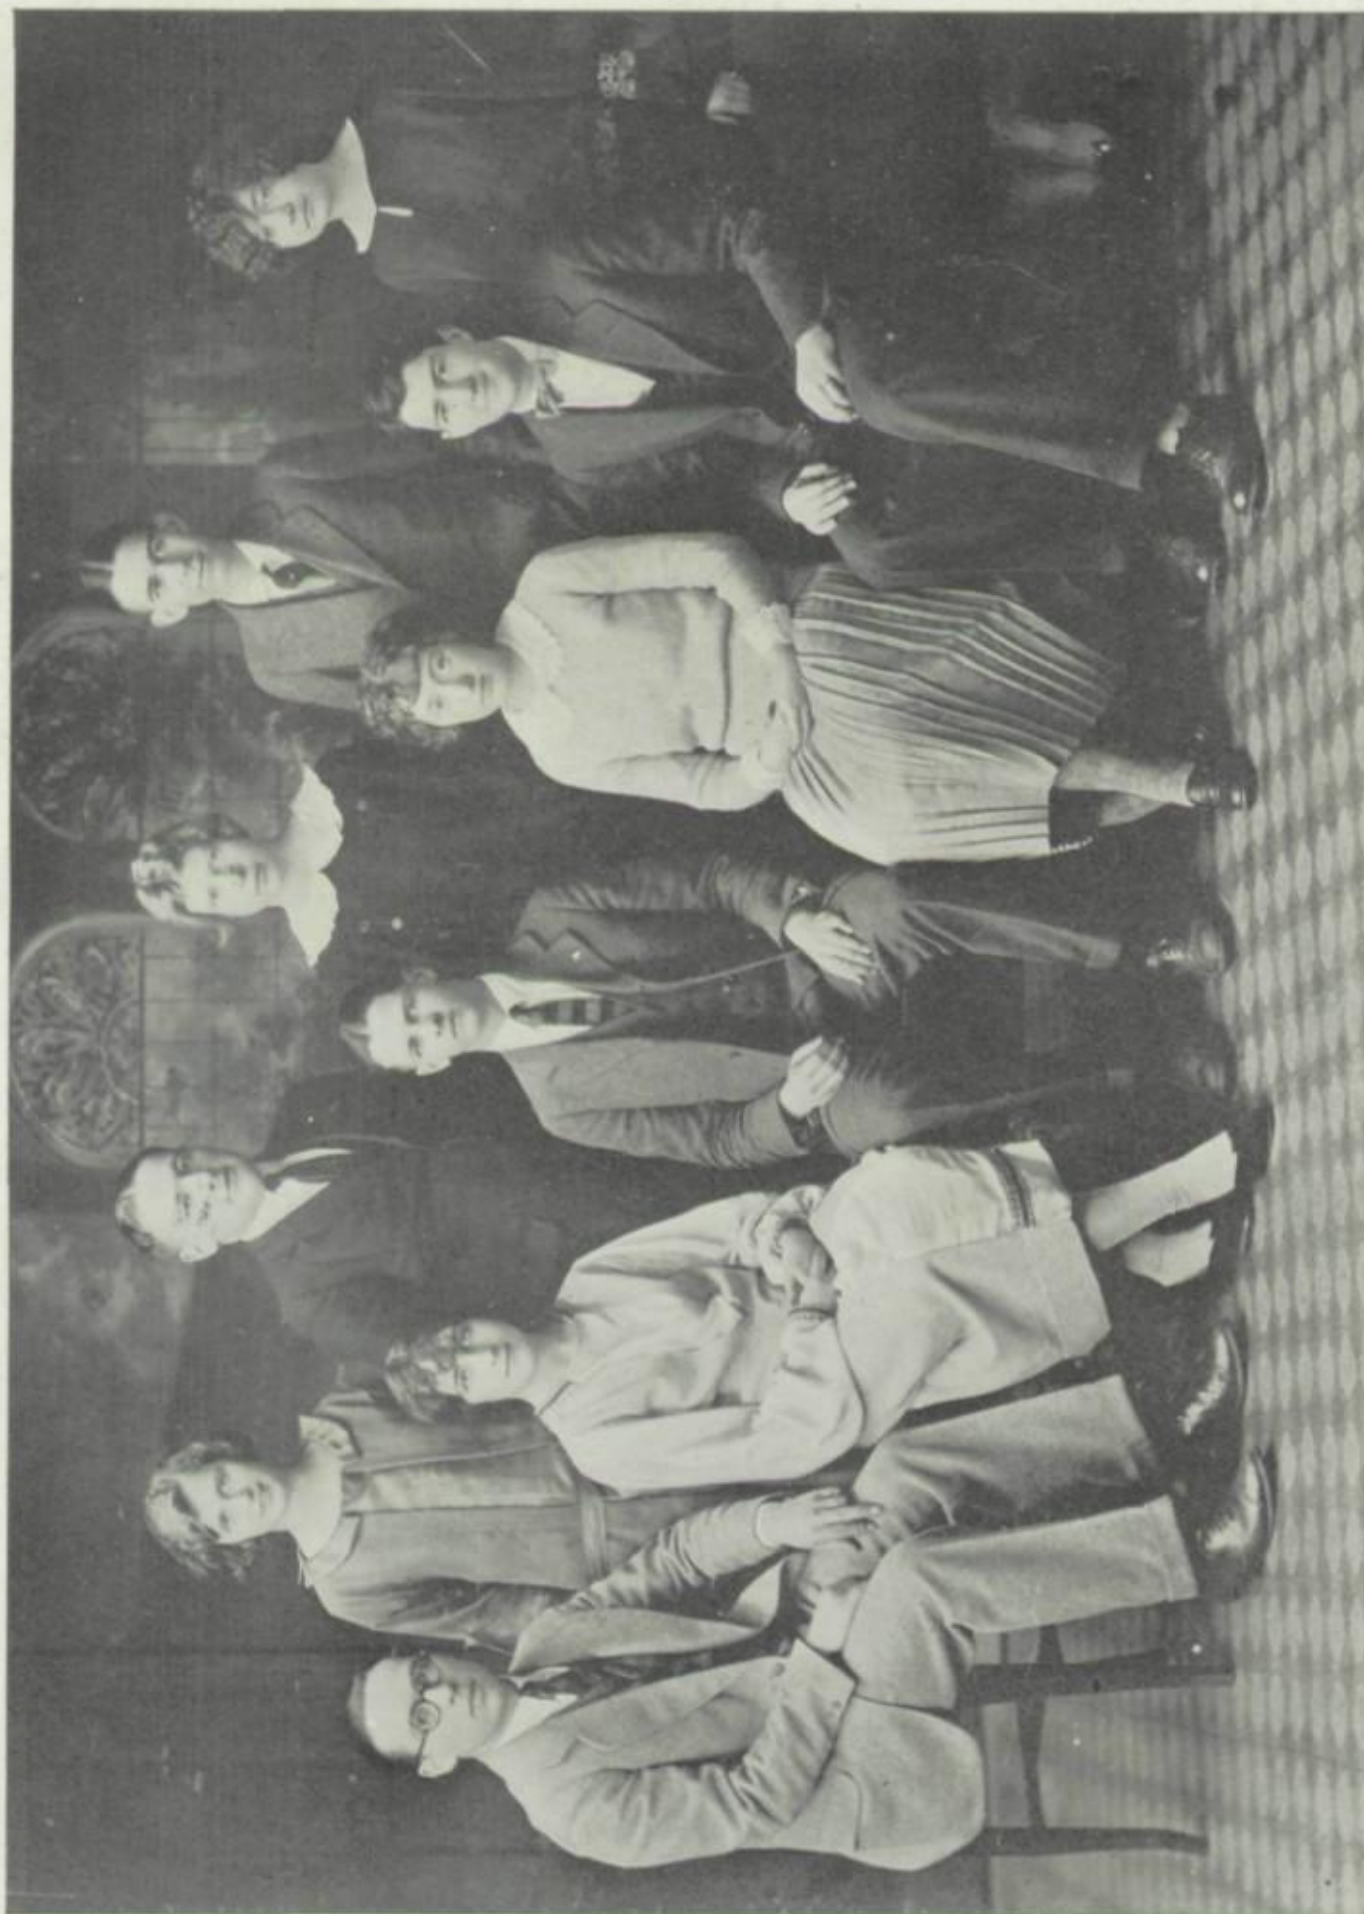

ON February 29th in Room 11 a new club was organized in the school, "The Shakespeare Club." For a long time a club of this kind has been needed in this school, with the purpose of furthering the study and enjoyment of Shakespeare's life and works.

The club at the second meeting, under the direction of Miss Helen Groves and Miss Ruth E. Bennett, adopted a constitution and decided on a program for the remaining meetings. The plan was to study first Shakespeare's life and later in the term take up his works. So far Shakespeare's early life has been discussed. Meetings are planned in the future to study the manner of Shakespeare's dealing with plot, setting and characters, and later to discuss such of Shakespeare's plays as "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Othello," "King John." Scenes are to be acted from each play.

The club intends to dramatize one of Shakespeare's best plays in the "High School Auditorium" in the near future. A big social event is also planned by the club for some time in June. The advisors and members of the club are hoping to get a good precedent and to give this club a permanent position in the school.

The officers for the ensuing year were elected at the second meeting and are as follows:

Two years ago, the Wilmington High School extended to its students the privilege of election to membership in the National Honor Society of Secondary Schools, by organizing a local chapter. No honor, conferred by the Faculty upon the students, exceeds that represented by this society, which recognizes the four cardinal principles—Scholarship, Character, Leadership, and Service.

During the two years of the existence of the Honor Society in Wilmington High School, the members have endeavored to hold before the whole student body such motives as shall encourage lower classmen to cultivate scholarly habits, noble character, valuable service, and worthy leadership. In its various activities, the society has made creditable progress in advancing the welfare of the Wilmington High School in every possible way.

OFFICERS

President FRANCES SAMUEL
Vice-President ANNA KURTZ
Secretary and Treasurer FREDERICA TRAPNELL

IN the fall of 1924 a new organization was formed at the Wilmington High School, which was the Girls Advisory Council composed of one representative from each girl's room. The main purposes of the council are:

1. To promote greater co-operation in the student body.
2. To raise the personal standards of the students.
3. To raise the scholastic standards of the pupils.
4. To assist the traffic squad in the fulfillment of its duties.
5. To regularly collect news for a publication in the city newspapers.

Meetings of the council are held every Wednesday morning at 8.45, with Miss Fitzwater as advisor. Many problems pertaining to the welfare of the school are discussed, the results of which are carried back to the home rooms, and this message reaches every girl.

On Wednesday, March 11th, a Saint Patrick's Day tea was given in the honor of the mothers of the girls in the council. About twenty guests were present, and the mothers were given an opportunity to become better acquainted with the school and its plans for their daughters.

Boys Advisory Council

Boys Advisory Council

THE Boys Advisory Council is composed of a representative from each boy's room in the school. Meetings are held every Wednesday morning from 8:45 to 9:15.

The duty of the council is to have a voice in any matter which may come up during the term that is of interest to the students. The work of the club includes moral and physical conditions, in connection with the school, and helps to make the school stand for clean sports and conduct within and without the High School.

The representatives make reports to their home rooms each week. These reports enable all the student body to know what is being done by the council. The representatives also bring up any matter in the meetings that their home rooms may wish to have considered.

The officers of the council are as follows:

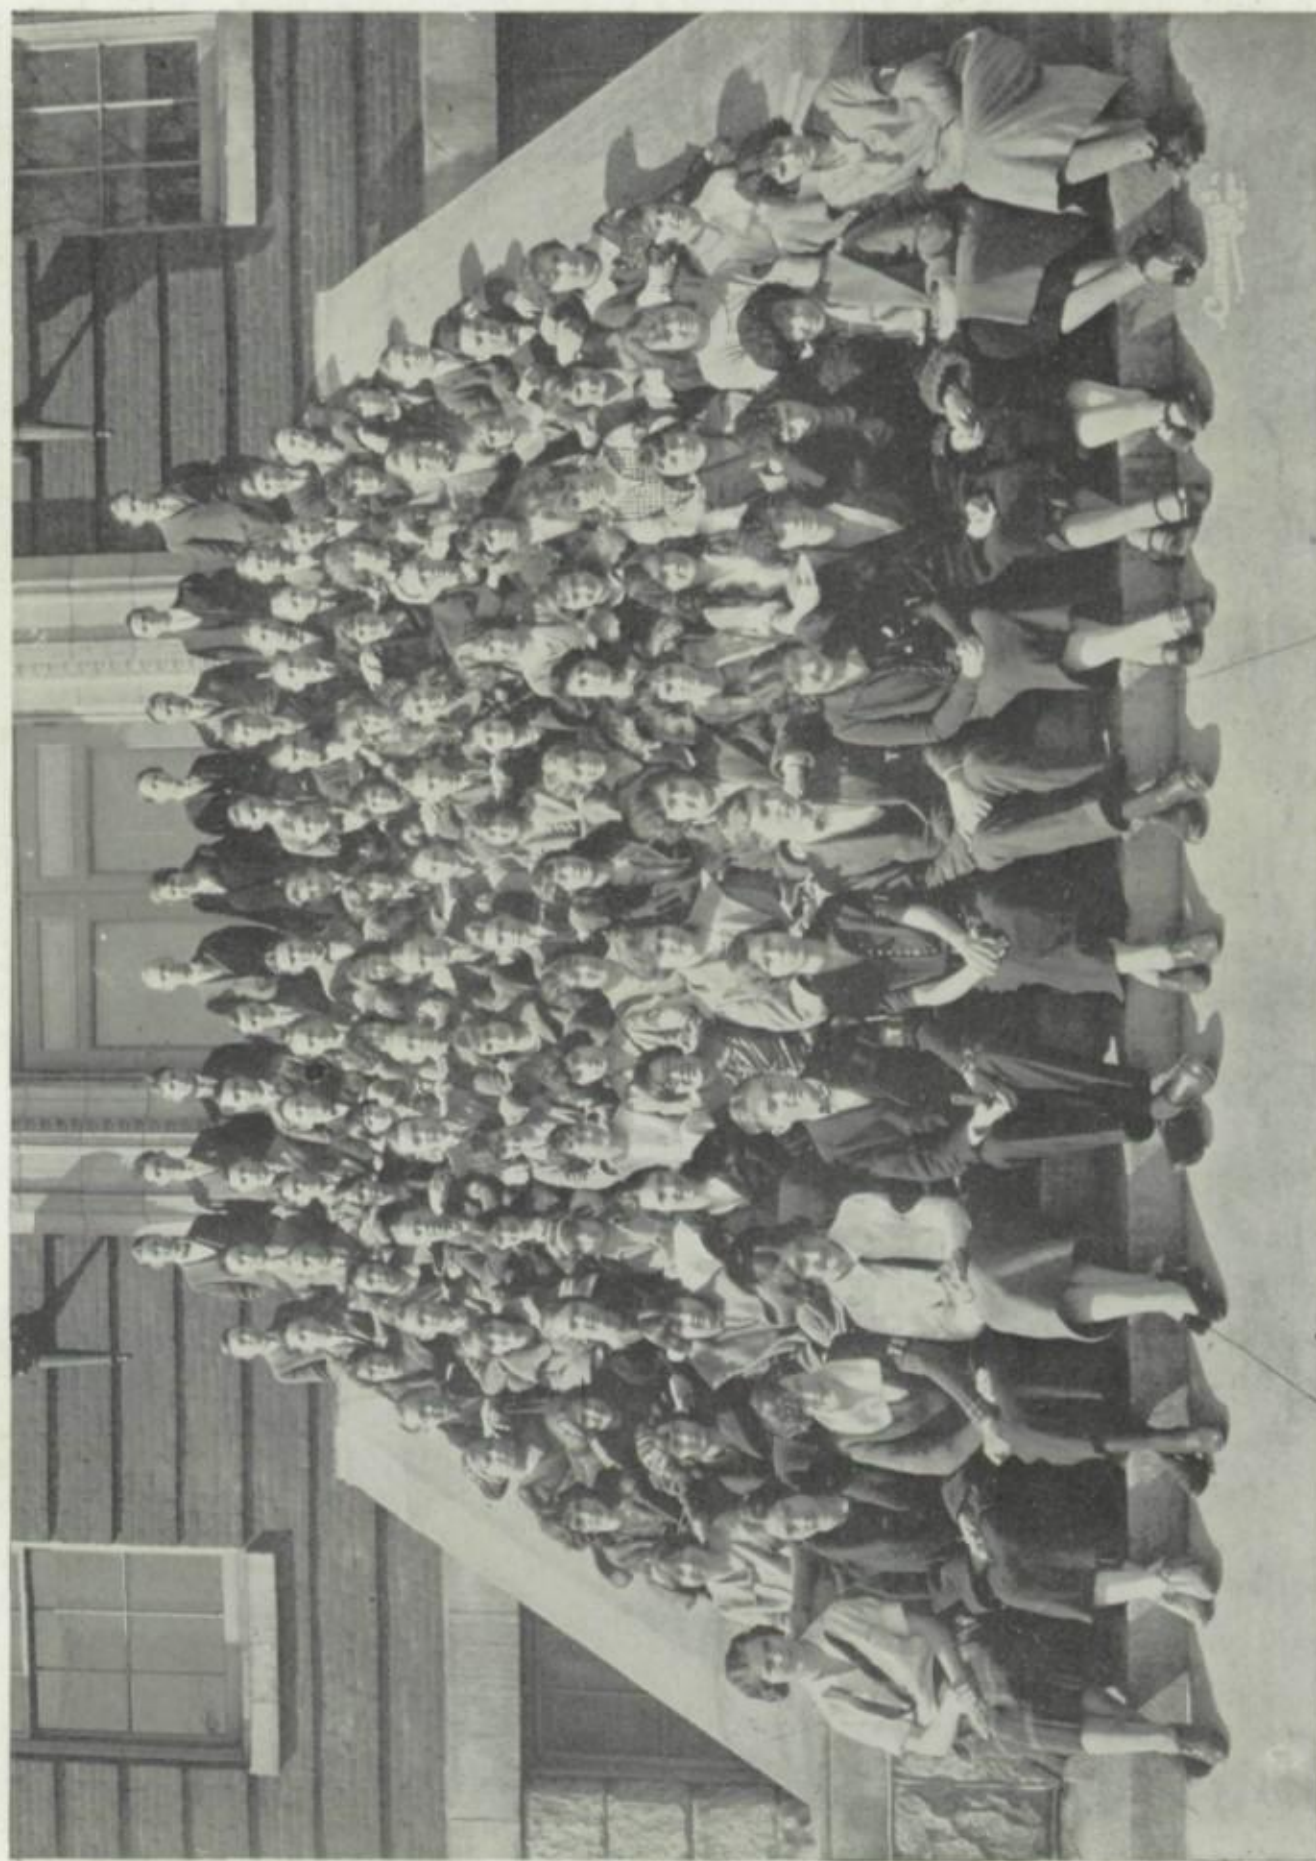

SEPTEMBER TO FEBRUARY '24

President	WILLIAM ROBELEN
Vice-President	CLELAND REESE

History of the Glee Clubs

THE Glee Clubs of the Wilmington High School were organized in October, 1923. Their first public appearance was given May 2, 1924, when the operetta, "The Maid and the Middy" was very successfully presented before an enthusiastic audience.

At the beginning of the September semester, they were reorganized into their respective groups, Advanced Girls', Freshman Girls' and Boys' Clubs. The work of this new term was the preparation of cantatas which were sung at the regular Assembly Exercises of the School. The two Advanced Clubs sang "The Building of the Ship" by Fearis, while the Freshman Girls' Club presented "The Garden of Flowers" by Denza.

On May 1, 1925 the annual operetta was given by the combined clubs. "In Arcady," with its clever story and catchy music proved to be the best work they ever presented.

Wilmington High School Orchestra

The High School Orchestra

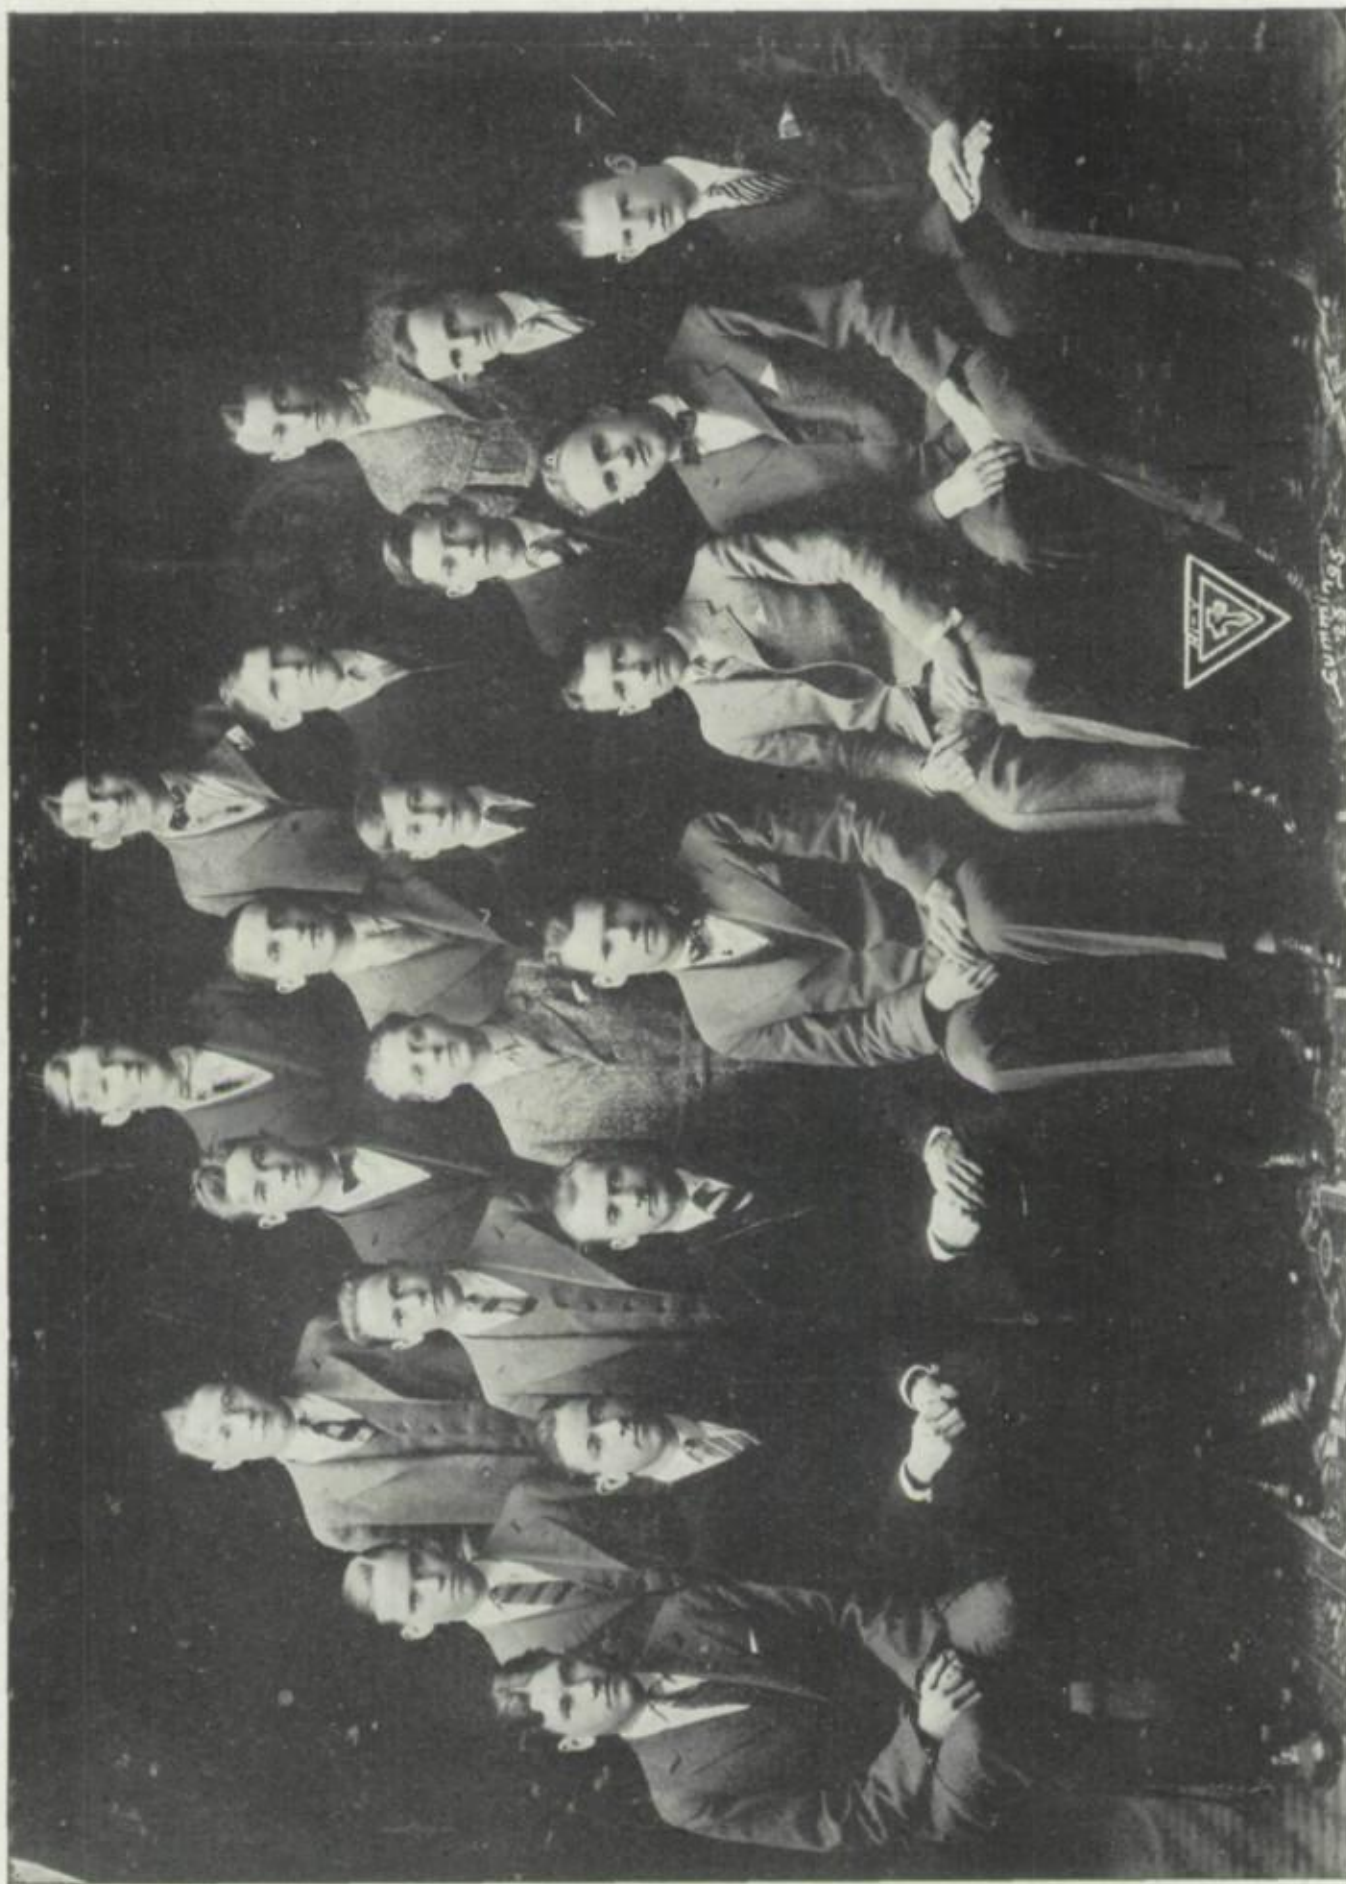

THE High School Orchestra occupies a very important place in the social life of the school. It is one of most enjoyable features of our Friday morning Auditorium program. In the fall it assisted in the presentation of the cantata "The Building of the Ship" by Fearis.

In 1904 the Orchestra was reorganized under the direction of John D. Taylor, who has remained its leader throughout the succeeding years. It has been through his able leadership that the orchestra has attained its success.

Our orchestra deserves a great deal of credit for the pleasures it gives the student body, for without its music we would certainly feel lost.

THE Quannacut Club of Girl Reserves of the Y. W. C. A. was organized in February, 1922, by the girls entering as freshmen. Miss Sara F. Passmore was chosen advisor to the club. Every member knew the purpose was "to find and give the best" and under Miss Passmore's leadership they were successful in a great measure in working out that purpose. Within a short time the club included members of both the Freshman and Sophomore classes. When the members of the club become Juniors they are admitted into the Friendship Club, the charter members having entered it in September.

During the three years of its organization the club has done much social service and had many instructive as well as constructive meetings. Recently Miss Madeline Dixon and Mrs. George Hering took up the leadership of the club.

ONE of the oldest clubs in the Wilmington High School is "Le Cercle Francais" which has been in existence for about six years. The first club was probably the most successful one we have ever had because the group was small enough to meet at the homes of the members; each one felt a responsibility for the work of the society. The unusual ability and personality of the president, Hugh Rennie, contributed much to this success.

The purpose of the club from the very beginning has been to give the pupil a greater opportunity for conversational French than is possible in the recitation period, to afford some training in parliamentary expressions, to develop fluency by means of plays and dialogues and to give additional information concerning the French people and their customs.

Throughout the year, the program committee has arranged many interesting programs including various short plays and sketches presented by the members, a talk on the Olympic games by Mr. Gardner and several musical selections, which have added much to the pleasure of the meetings.

Physics Club

The Physics Club

THE Physics Club of the Wilmington High School was formed the latter part of the fall term of 1924. Its purpose is to promote a greater interest in Physics and to see the practical application of Physics by visiting the different manufacturing plants.

The officers elected for this term are:

President	GLADYS E. McRAE
Vice-President	EDITH RICHARDSON
Secretary and Treasurer ...	MARSTON FOX
Councilors	LOUISE RIPP, LUCILE COOK
Advisors	MESSRS. SNYDER, LOOMIS, KERCHNER

The meetings of the club are held the second and fourth Thursdays of the month at 2:45. At least one of these meetings each month is a business meeting, the other sometimes is a visit to the plant, as the visit to the Wilmington Electroplating Plant. Each meeting there is at least one talk on some subject pertaining to Physics; Mr. Loomis is now giving a series of talks on Astronomy.

The meetings have been very successful and the membership of the club is steadily growing.

President JOHN E. LEE
Vice-President EMIL MAURER
Secretary and Treasurer WILLIAM DELIKAT

THE Co-operative Chemistry Club is composed of boys who are studying Chemistry as a profession under the Co-operative plan; that is, they alternate practical laboratory experience with the technical training received in school.

This club was organized in October, 1924, in order that its members might have common social as well as scientific interests. Although still in its infancy, this organization has accomplished many things. Several interesting trips have been made; these include visits to the Commercial Museum and to the Pennsylvania Salt Company, of Philadelphia. Other trips and outdoor meetings, which are a feature of the club, are planned for the summer months. In the near future it is intended to have some of the well-known industrial chemists of this vicinity address the meetings of the organization.

Commerce Club

The Commerce Club

THE Commerce Club of the Wilmington High School was organized on November 5, 1923, under the direction of Mr. J. C. Evans, former head of the Commercial Department. Membership in the club is restricted to third and fourth-year students in the Commercial Department. The officers elected at that time were: Lewis McKinney, President; Warren Hanby, Vice-President; Baptist Milano, Treasurer; Beatrice Hall, Recording Secretary, and Anna Ryan, Corresponding Secretary.

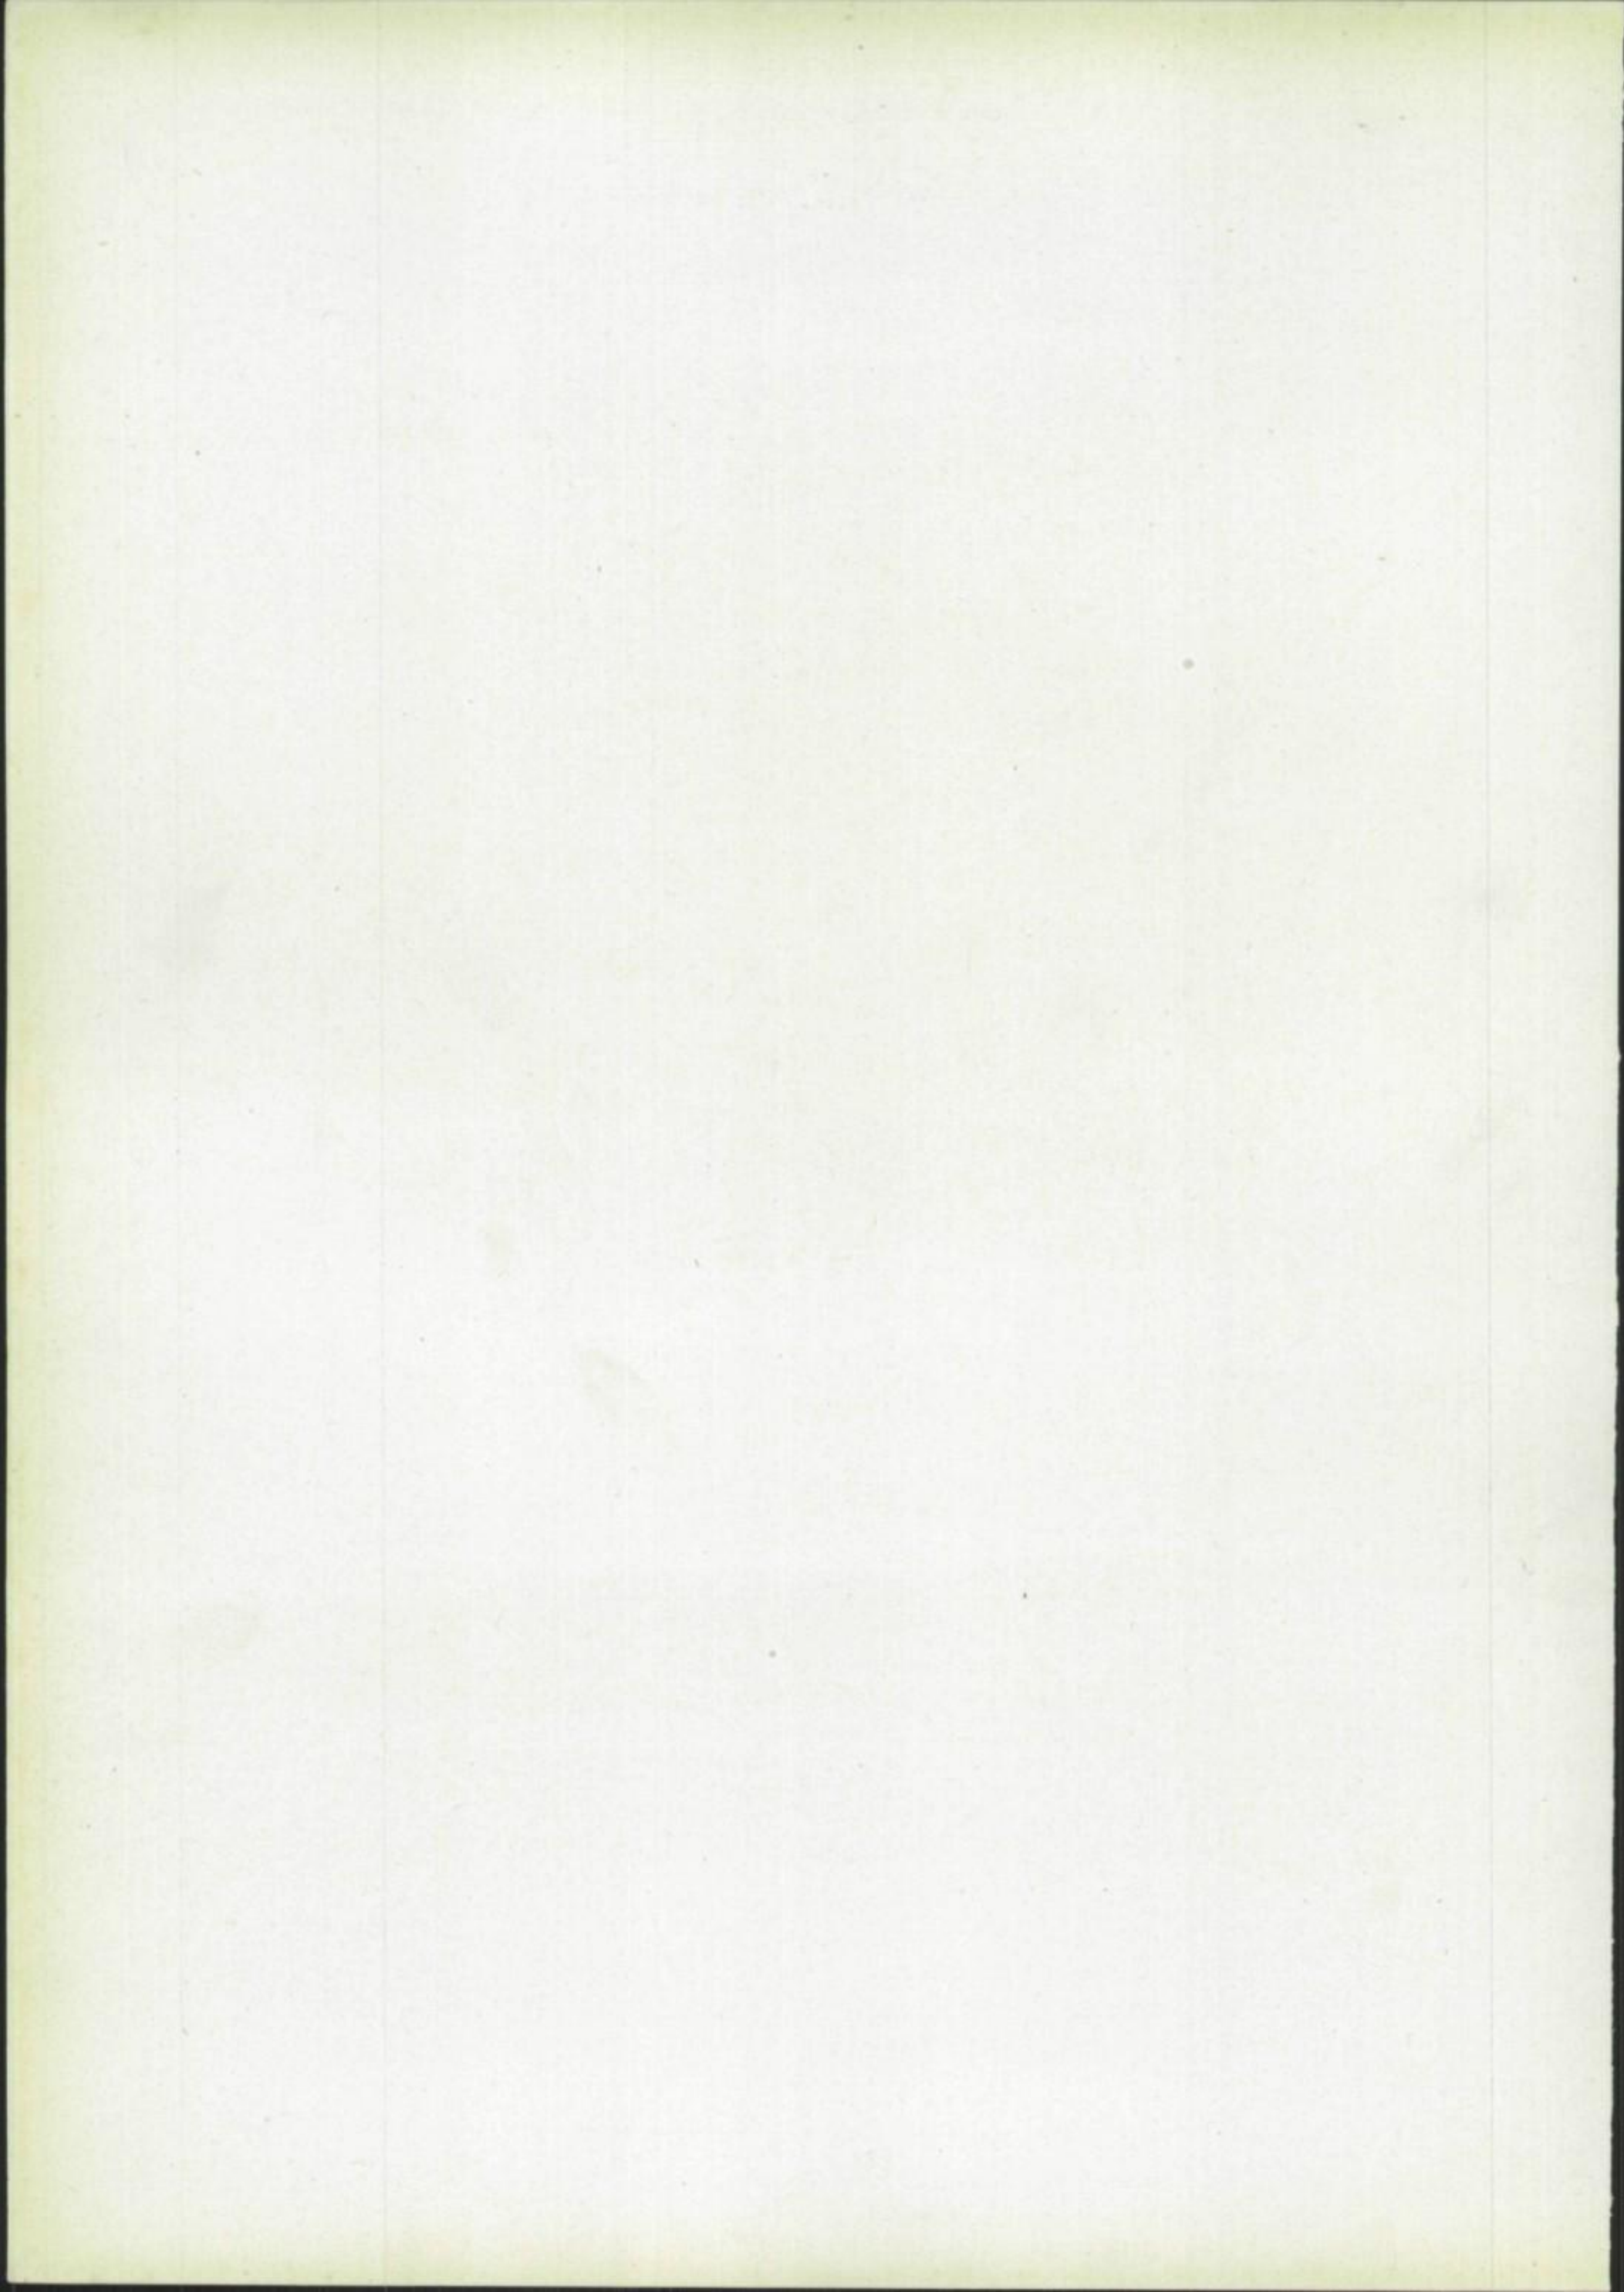

On May 1, 1924, a meeting convened to elect the following officers to fill the places left vacant by the graduating members of the February Class: James Goldstein, President; Warren Hanby, Vice-President; Freda Cohen, Treasurer; Beatrice Hall, Recording Secretary, and Isabelle Foulk, Corresponding Secretary. Chairmen and members of the Committees were also appointed. One of the most pleasing events of that semester was the river ride staged by the members of the Club on one of the local steamboats.

THE most interesting, fascinating and thrilling of sports—Football! We won four games, lost four, and tied one. In the first game of the season the Cherry and White gladiators, after a hard fight, took the Coatesville tribe into camp with the score 6-0. The following week we trod roughshod over the Laurelites, and sent them back 'ome, with a score tag of 31-6. Since Coach Donalson was absent from this game his assistant, Mr. Hale, took charge. Coach Donalson appeared the following Monday to "tune" us up for the Northeast High of Philadelphia.

October eighteenth at eight o'clock, the football squad started out on a one hundred and fifty-mile journey to Easton, Pennsylvania. We arrived in time for dinner, lost the game, by a score of 74-0, and came back home. The following week we journeyed to Glen-Nor. Here the scorekeepers, when the final whistle blew, found the score balancing even, 0-0.

November first, a day that should never be forgotten by any High School student. The Cherry and White defeated the Yellow and Gray at Harlan field by a 2-0 score in one of the most thrilling and exciting games of the season. The following week the boys worked night and day with the thought of taking their age old rival—Chester—into camp. When Saturday evening rolled around they found themselves six points behind the enemy.

Saturday, November fifteenth, marked the first snow of the season. The wind, rain, snow and slush did not stop the W. H. S. gladiators from sending Southern High School of Philadelphia home on the short end of a 20-0 score.

Thanksgiving—last game for a number of fellows—everybody full of pep and rarin' to go, but not raring quite so hard as Jenkintown. We ate roast turkey with a 9-0 score staring us in the face.

Great credit is due to Coach J. Harmer Donalson, Assistant Coach Ernest Hale, and Doctor Roger Gregory, the team physician.

"Varsity" Basketball Squad

Basketball

LAYING through one of the hardest schedules ever attempted, the basketball team that represented the Wilmington High School for the 1924 and 1925 season enjoyed one of the most successful seasons ever accomplished by a Cherry and White quintet. The Highlets met some of the best high school teams in this section and succeeded in winning thirteen games out of eighteen starts. This record is one of which the Cherry and White rooters need not be ashamed.

The class of the schedule and the class of the team was indicated by the fact that among the opponents of the Cherry and White were: Camden High, Coatesville High, three of the fast Philadelphia combinations, in addition to two games with Chester, Salesianum and Friends School. Two of the really important games were lost and the victory fell in the hands of Salesianum. This is no indication whatever for both games were battles of speed and rivalry.

Our two defeats over Chester, our traditional rival, made our season all the more successful. The team from "up the river" has been falling into our hands for the last few seasons. As a concluding number, our team scored decisive victories over Friends School in both games.

The victories over such teams as Chester, Germantown, Friends, Glen-Nor and Coatesville show the strength of our team. Due to the fact that it was not a veteran quintet the success of the season is due to our coach, Fred J. Brown, who deserves and must come in for a share of tribute, therefore, let us extend our felicitations to the coach.

Prospects looked very promising at the beginning of the season because we had three letter men back from the previous season—Johnny LeCarpentier, Walt Green and Babe Scott. With "Specks" LeCarpentier acting as captain. Prospects were stimulated through the picking of men from last year's Junior Varsity to fill the places which were empty. Green took care of the "tap off," with Scott and Midlam at the forward posts and Roger Holt was made into a stationary guard and LeCarpentier into a running guard or forward. Fred Herlihy, Aaron Warner, Allen Barton, Hugh Holt and Kloman Downing completed the reserves of the varsity.

Our cage representatives engaged in some close battles, but managed to score 566 points to 369 by their opponents. The highest score that Captain LeCarpentier and his mates scored was the first game of the season against Newark High, 46 to 16. The season's record of the team follows:

BASKETBALL SCHEDULE

46	Newark	16

"Varsity" Swimming Team

Swimming

IN its fourth year of competition the Wilmington High School swimming team made an enviable record and proved itself to be one of the leading teams in the East. Out of a schedule of ten dual meets, they failed to taste defeat once, and amassed a total of 435 points, as compared to 139, the score of their opponents. Captain Boyer was high scorer with 67 points, and suffered only one defeat in his favorite event, the fancy dive, out of the ten dual meets.

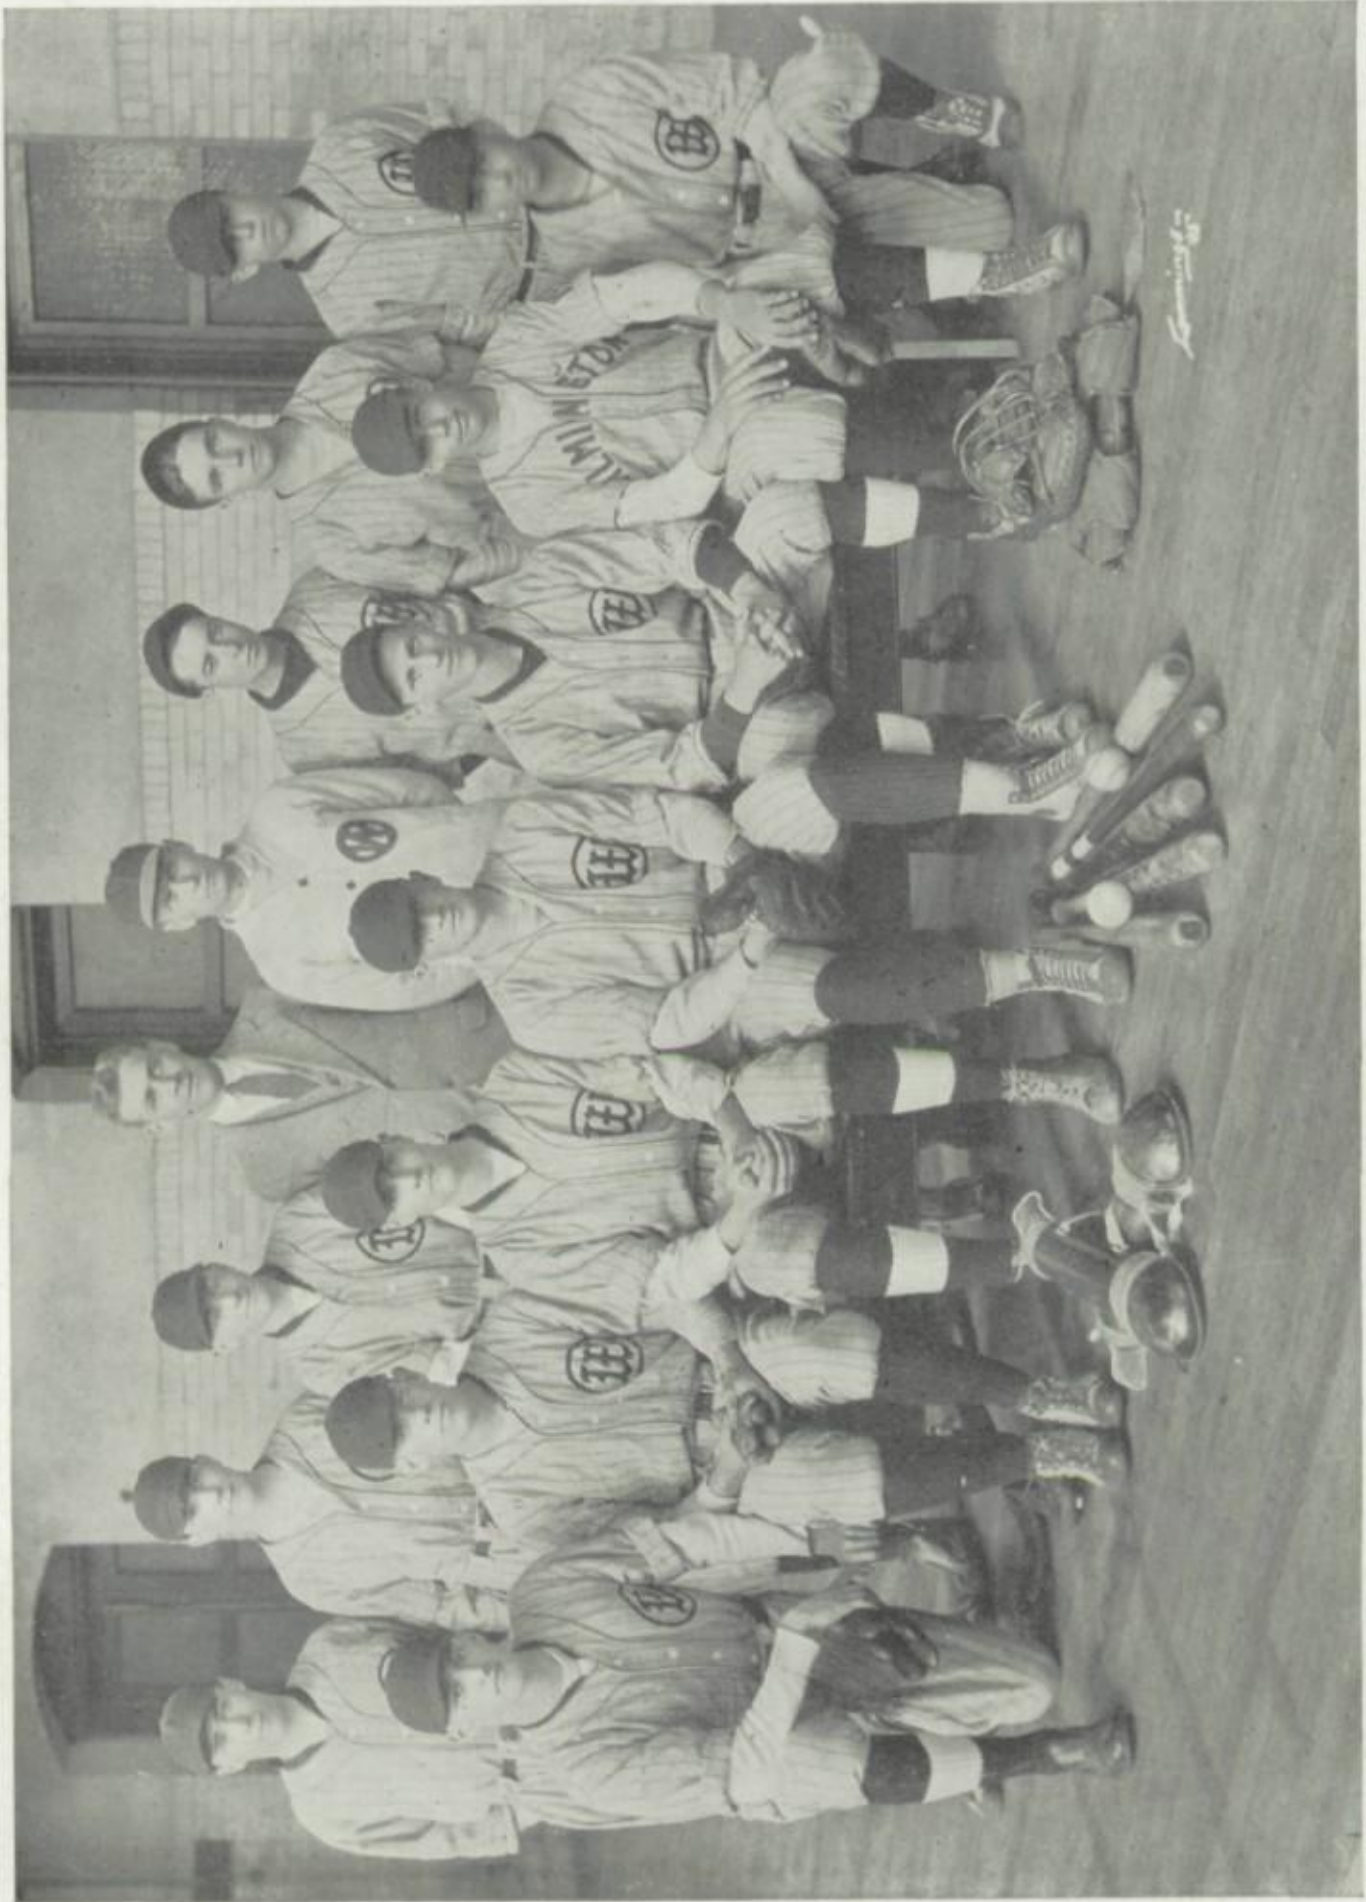

Probably the biggest accomplishment of the year was the winning of the Swarthmore Interscholastic Championships, in which our boys piled up more than twice the number of points needed to win. Individually the results were also gratifying in this meet for Brown won the backstroke in close to record time, while our relay team, composed of Palmer, Taylor, Reese and Nobis, surprised the field by breezing in an easy winner.

The greatest dual meet triumph was over the Central High School team, champions of Philadelphia. The Central High swimmers during the season succeeded in breaking every Philadelphia Public School record but one, consequently it could be said that they had the best team that ever represented a Philadelphia High School. In this meet the Cherry and White relay team set up a mark of 1.22 for 160 yards which is three seconds better than the Philadelphia record. The team was composed of Nobis, Taylor, Reese and Sheldon.

By placing five men in the National Individual Interscholastic Championships held at the University of Columbia, the team tied for second place with Mercersburg Academy. Our team received eleven points, while Andover Academy won with sixteen points.

Various explanations are given for the success of Wilmington High School swimming team under the handicap of a small pool, but the big answer is to be found in the person of Leroy Sparks, who has coached the team since its beginning in 1921, and by a remarkable personality and keen knowledge of the swimming game, has turned out swimming swimmers.

Bernard Nobis.

"Varsity" Baseball Squad

Baseball

T the close of the basketball season Coach Brown immediately issued a call for baseball candidates. About sixty boys answered the call. With such a large number out for the team, the prospects for a successful season were bright.

The first few days Coach Brown, with the able assistance of Assistant Coach Foulk and Coach of Pitchers Gardiner, gave the candidates limbering up exercises, in the "Gymn." At the end of the indoor practice the squad assembled on the field whenever the weather permitted. During these infrequent practices the candidates for each position were tried at their "specialty." This trial of candidates took about one of the two weeks remaining before the first game.

The next week was used in letting the boys who showed the most ability in the preliminary practice get used to working together. Everyone knows that a team cannot be organized of boys who have never played together before. So when the time for the first game came around the team was still very immature.

The opening game was on April fourteenth with West Philadelphia. Our team was defeated in this game by the score of eight to two. In this game the lack of practice was plainly evident both at the bat and in the field. The pitchers were also in poor condition, due to a continued cold spell.

The second game was on April twenty-fourth, with Goldey Business College. In this game we came out with the short end of a score. The team showed signs of improvement over the first game. This defeat was due to the efficiency of the Goldey's pitcher, who came back strong to redeem himself after last year's defeat.

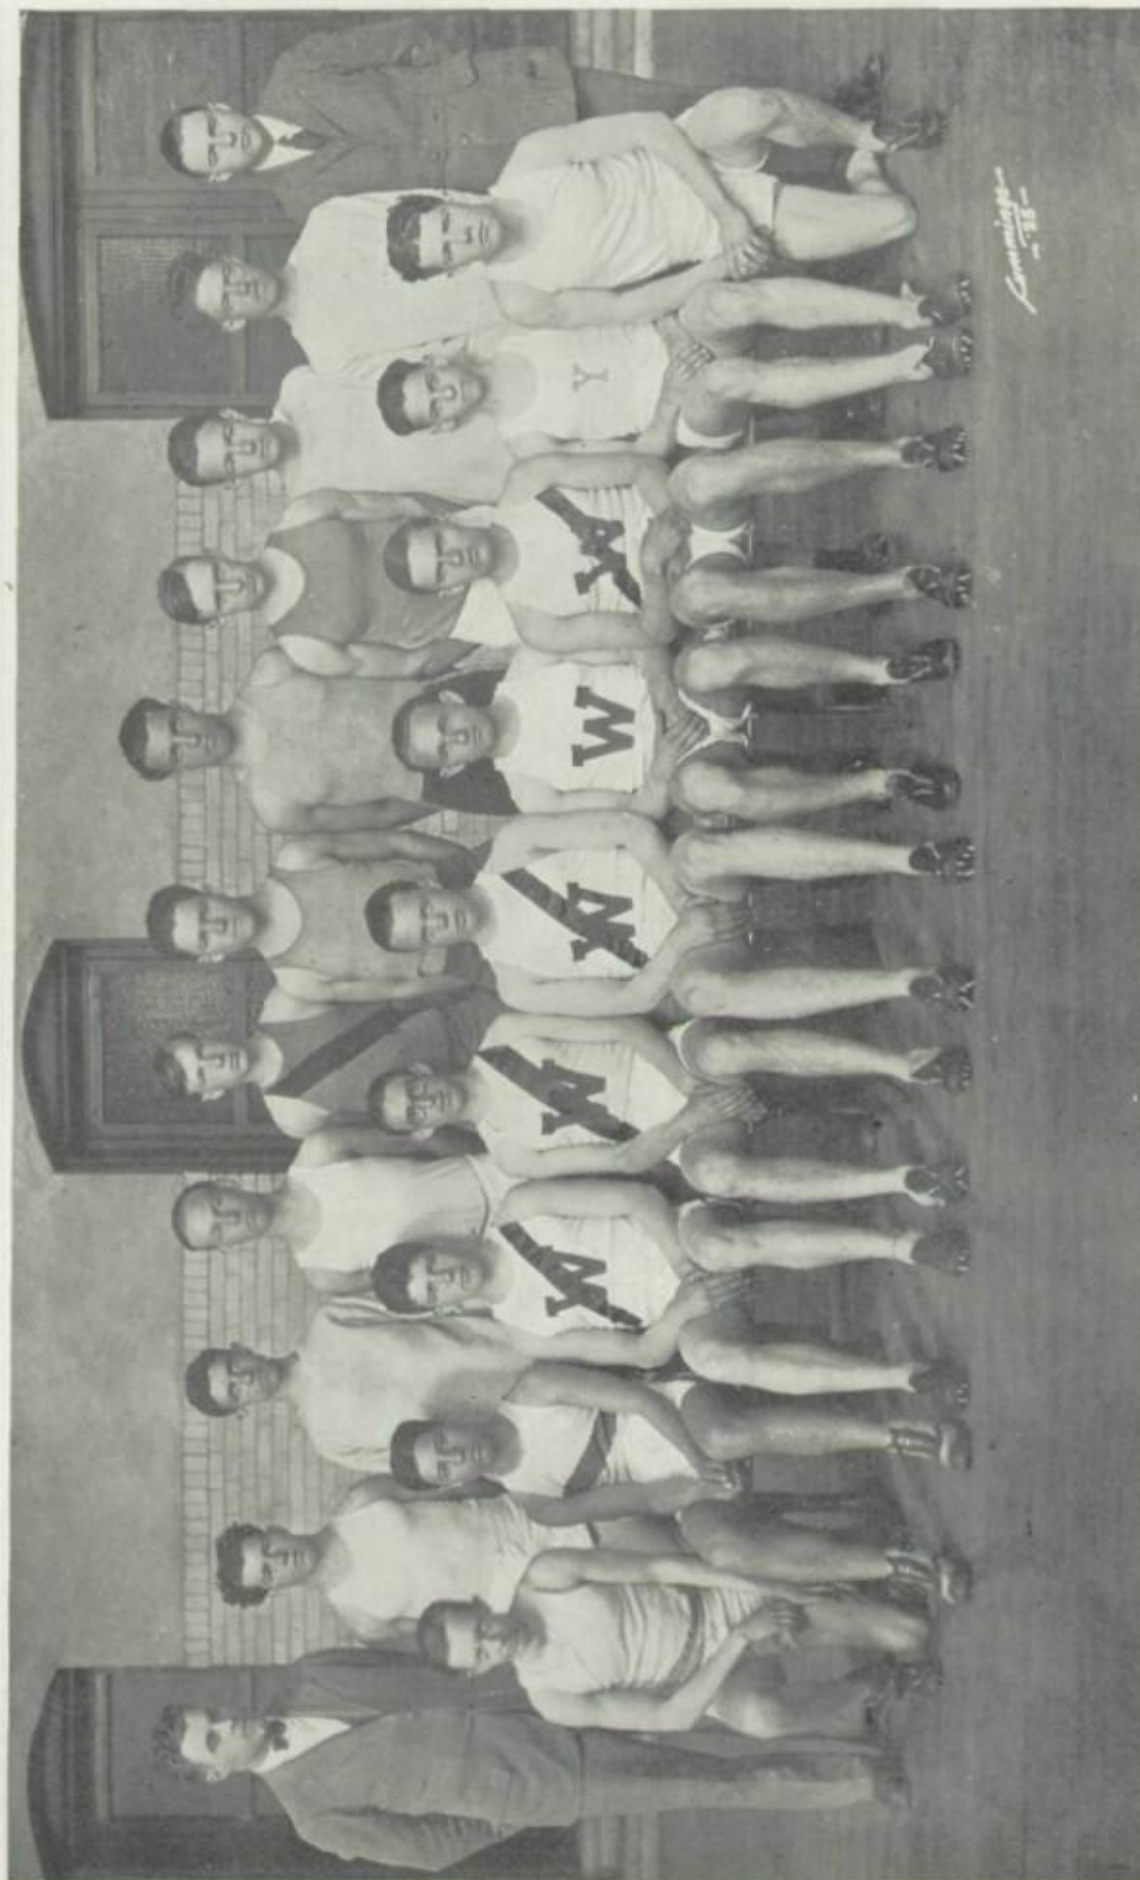

On May 12 the team under the direction of Assistant Coach Foulk travelled to School. In this game the team played like, "big leaguers," and it was evident that it had hit its stride. They defeated the Trade School boys ten to three, for the first win of the season.

The next game of the season was with Beacom's Business College. This game was played without the Coach or the Captain on the field. Thus the team entered the game with the odds against it. For the first five innings it looked as though the High School Boys were going to be shutout. But, at the beginning of the sixth, the team began to get at the Beacom pitcher and tied the score in the eighth only to be beaten out in the ninth, by the score of nine to eight.

The team next played was Wesley Collegiate Institute of Dover. This game showed that the team could hit as the score of twenty to three indicated. This game was a royal feast for our team.

On May 12 the team under the direction of Assistant Coach Foulk travelled to Camden and defeated the team of that city in a well played game by the score of nine to four.

Thus it can be seen from the above results that the team possesses winning qualities, and it should be one of the best the school has produced, since steady progress has been noticed from the first game until the present time.

"Varsity" Track Squad

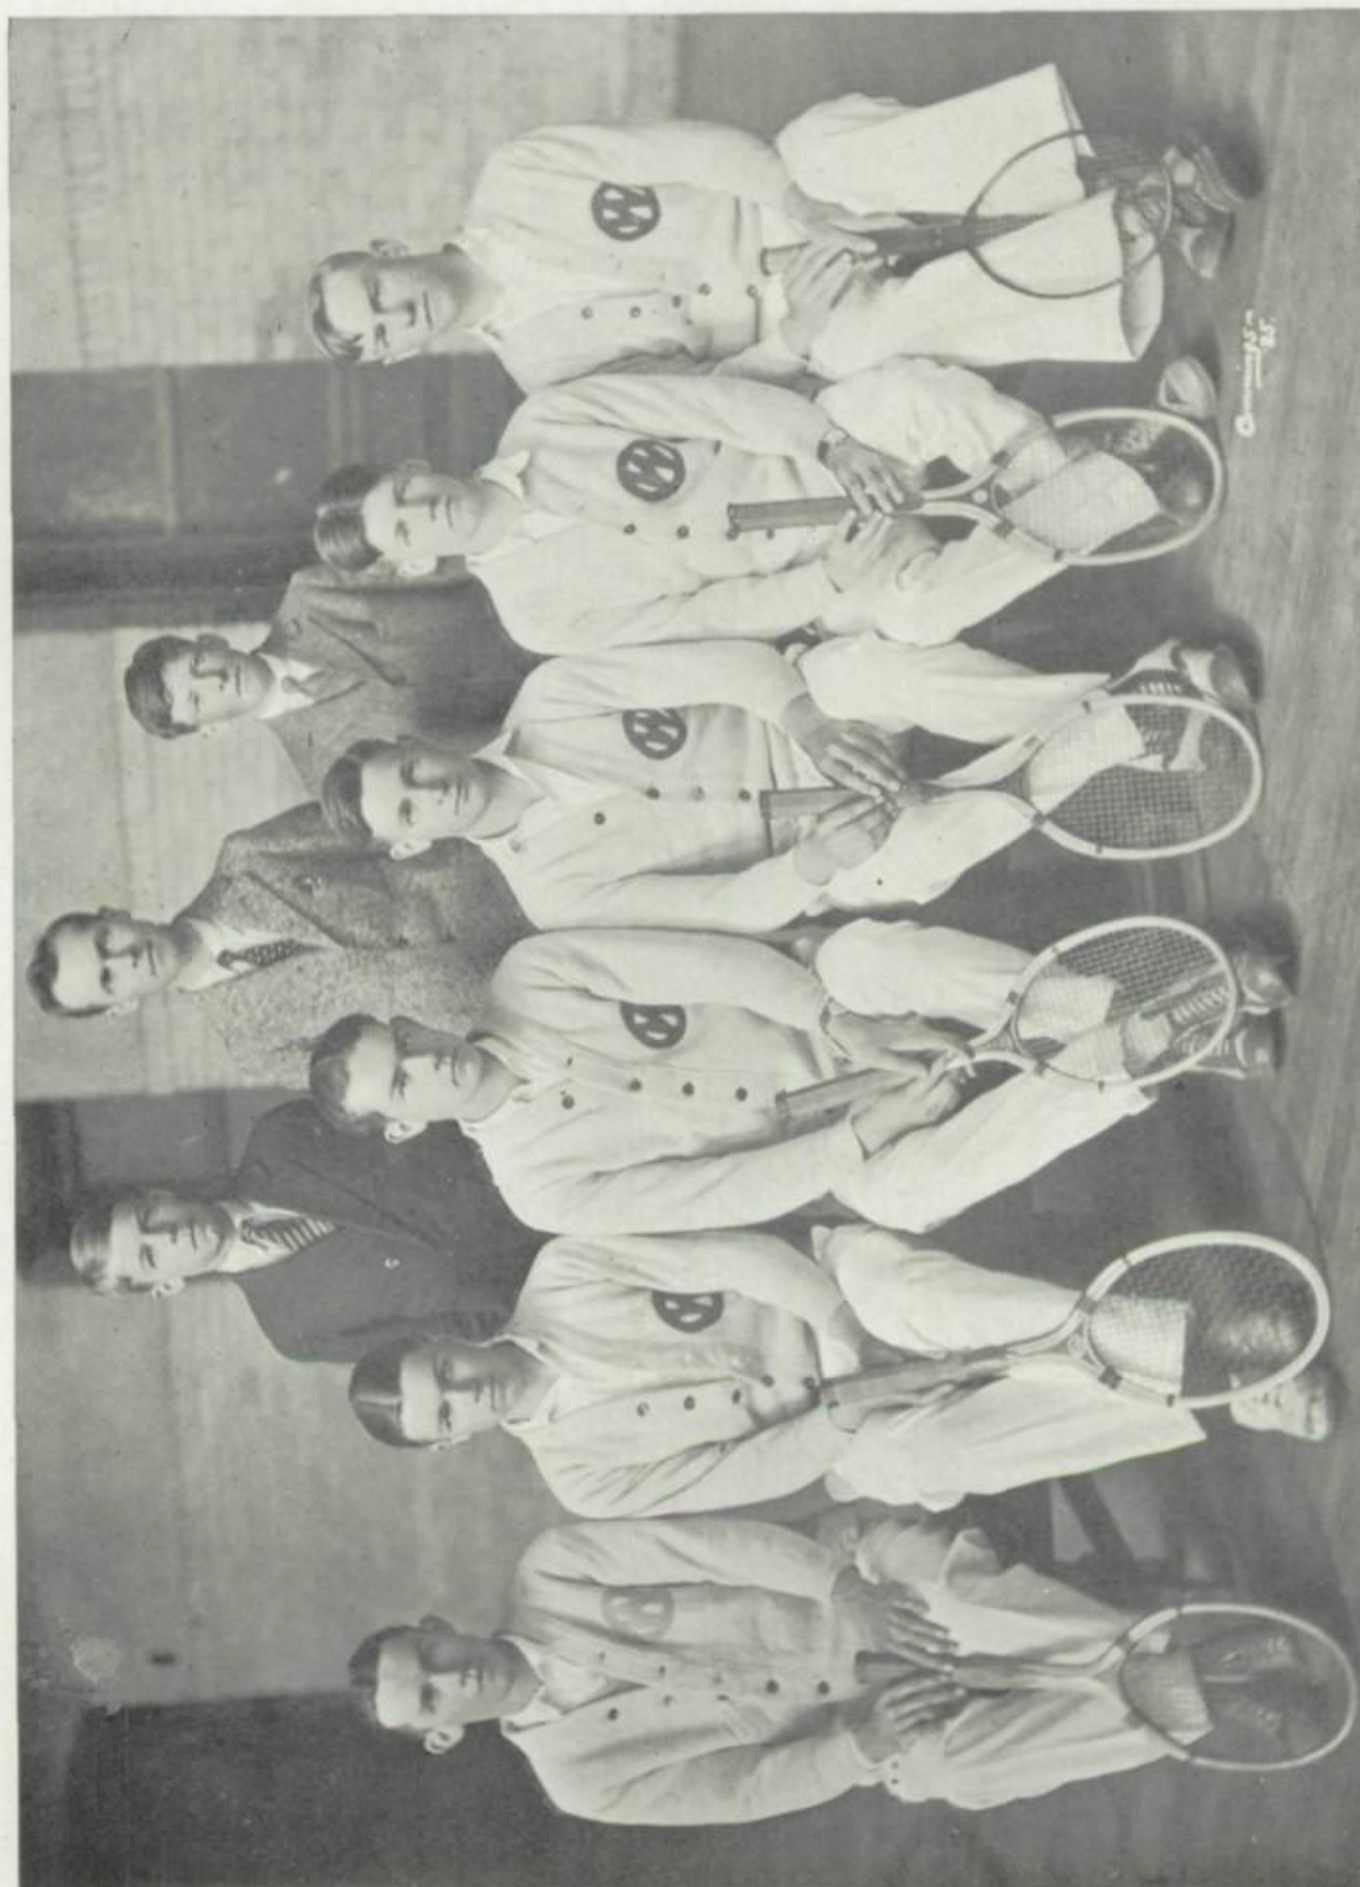

Track

THE year 1924 marked a distinct revival of track and field athletics. After the year 1916, the team did little to further its name. The team of 1924, under the coaching of Mr. Wertecnik, won three dual meets and lost one. They did exceptionally well in winning two interscholastic meets for which the team has two cups. Besides this the team placed in more than one event of the other Interscholastic meets.

Although the team of 1925, under the coaching of M. "Cliff" Garvine, Captain Jones and Manager Fredrick, failed to place at the Penn Relays, their time of 3.40 surpassed all previous records made by any relay team of Wilmington High School. The team has four duals and four interscholastics to prove their mettle this year.

With the new material of this year, there is no reason why the team should not come through victorious in many events.

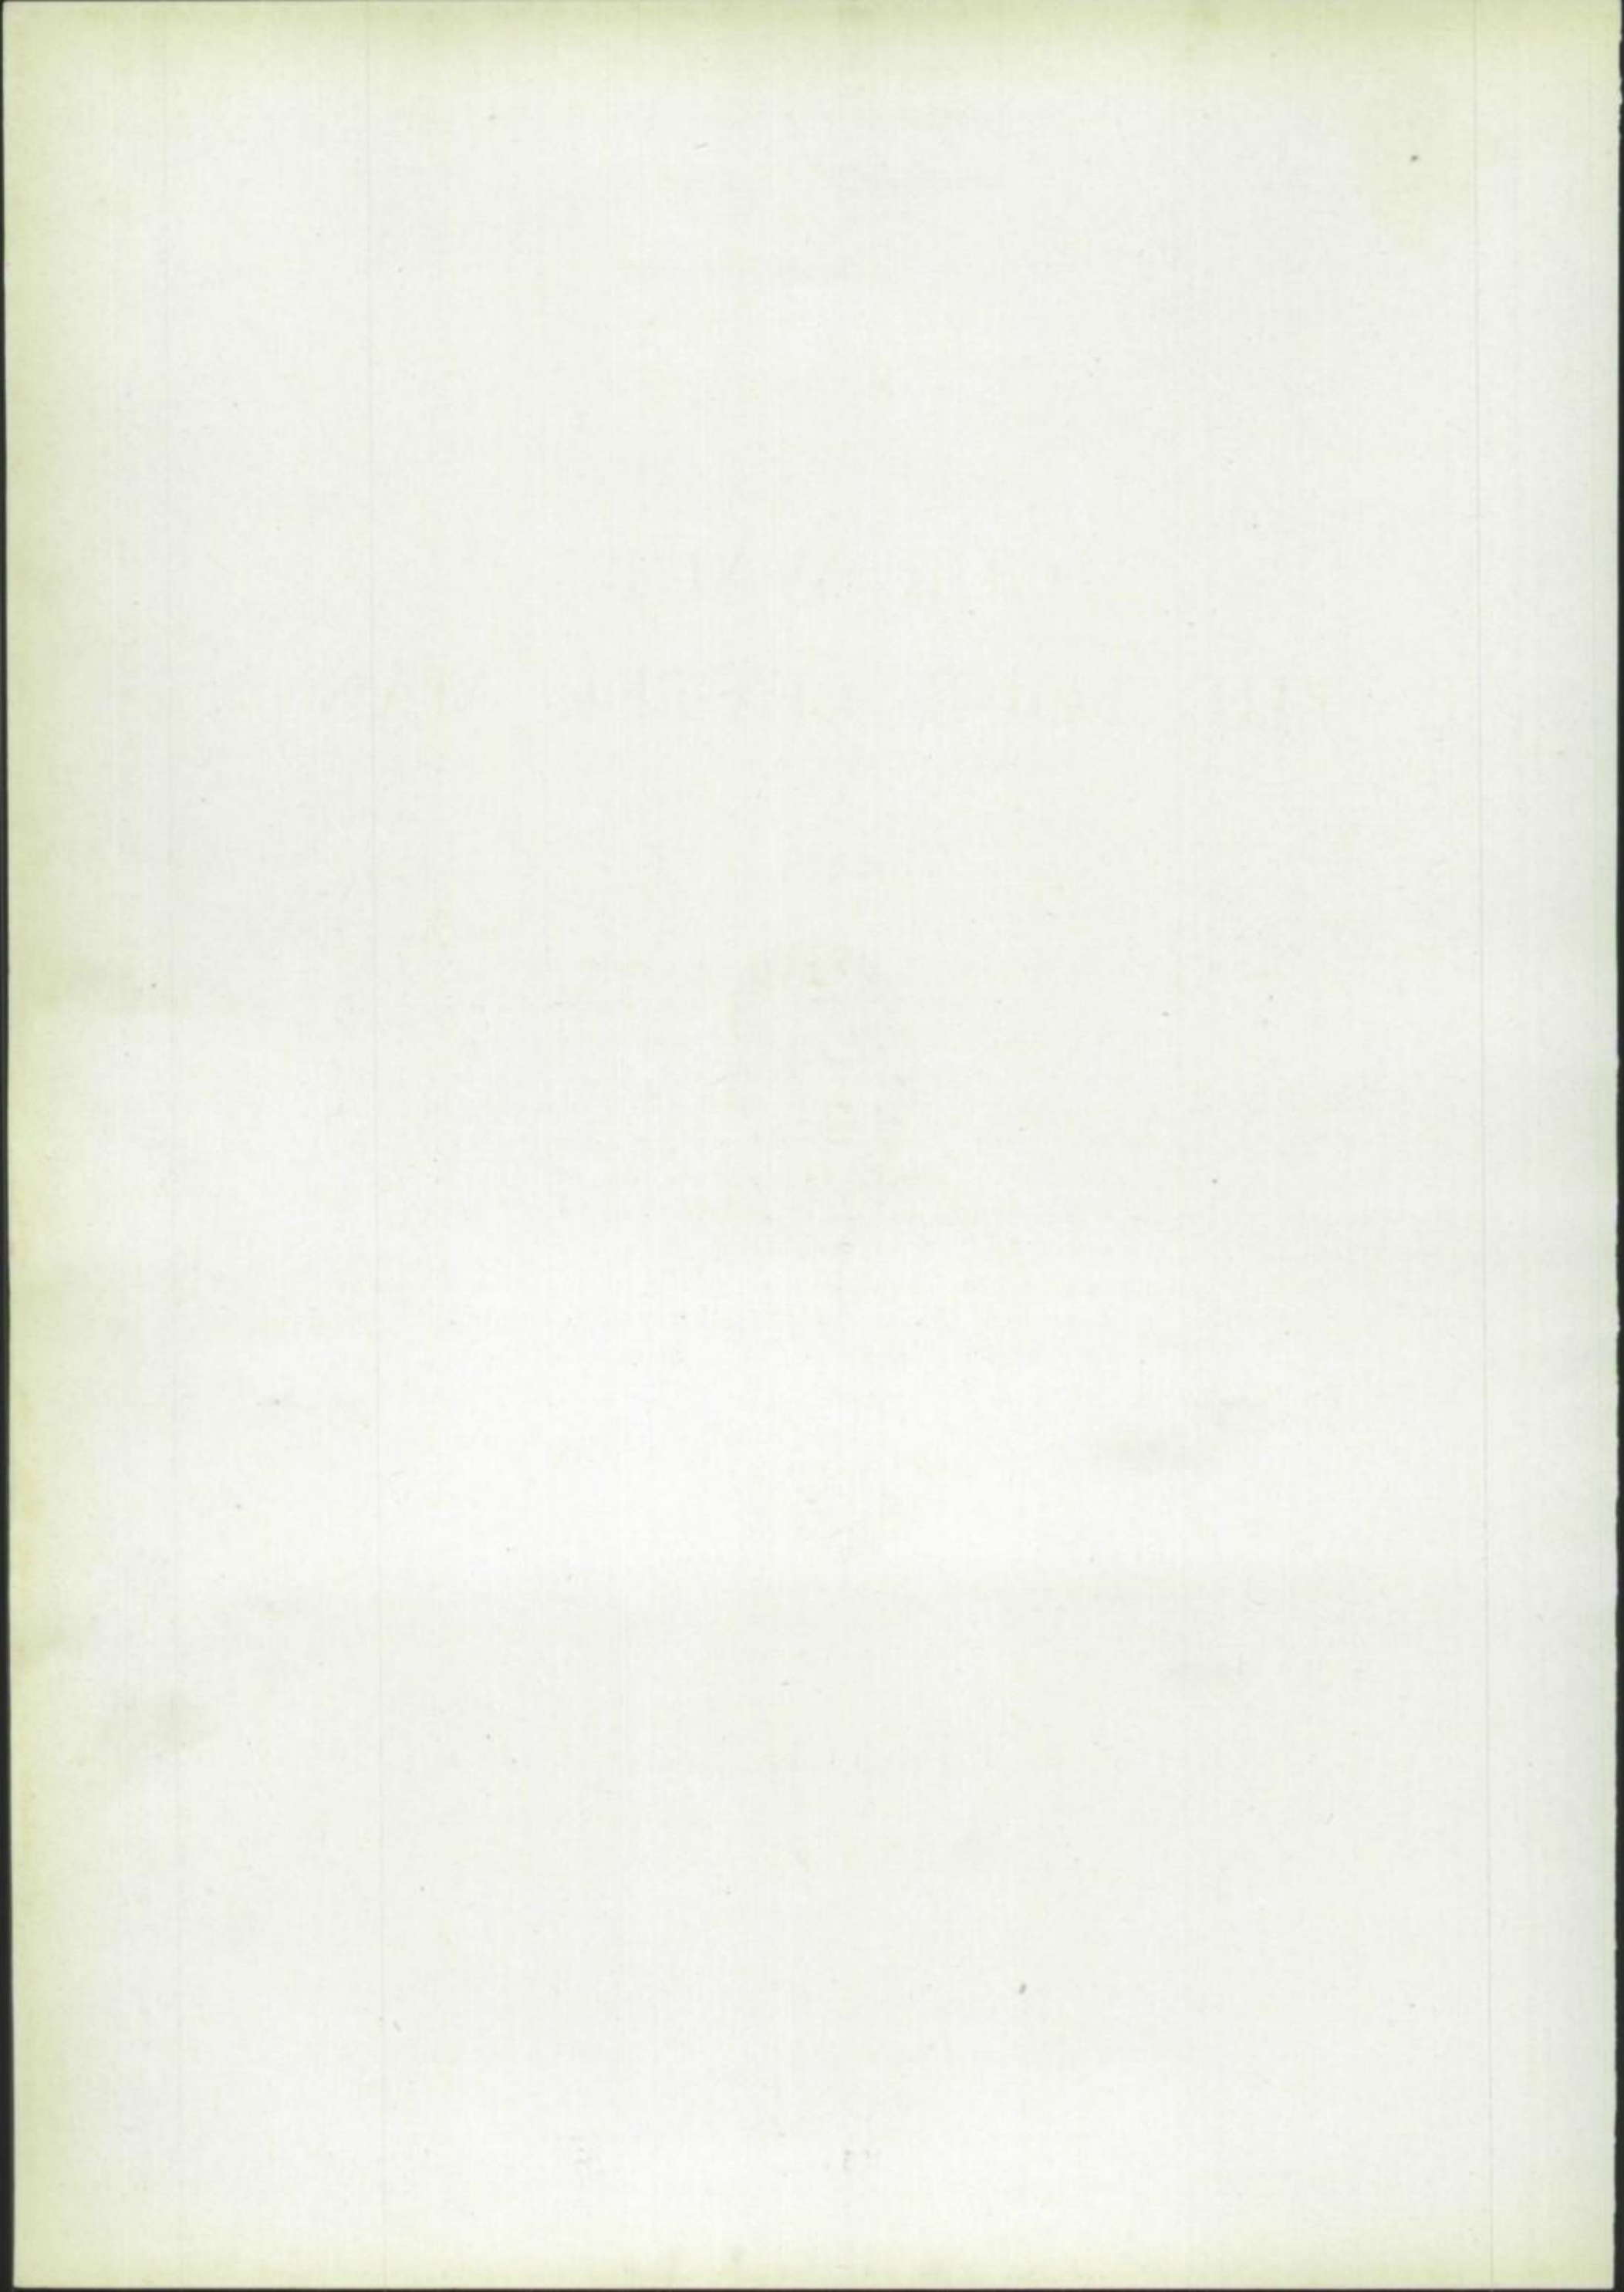

"Varsity" Tennis Team

Tennis

THE newest sport in High School is tennis. For two years tennis has been climbing up the athletic ladder to the goal, a major sport. Tennis has improved more and more each year. In 1923 High School lost but two games. This was the first year for tennis and showed a great stride for the honors of the school. In the second year, 1924, the team lost only one out of six played. The only team which beat High School in 1924 was Lancaster High School, who obtained the honor of playing a few Junior Tennis Champions of this district. In 1925, the Tennis Team has a good start. They defeated Glen-Nor on April 21 by the close score of 3-2. This match held everybody in suspense, but better teamwork was displayed on High School's side. On April 23, High School invaded Chester and trimmed their rivals with a score of 5-0. This game also showed the efficiency of our fifth and sixth men, who, in the doubles, defeated Chester's first and second men. With the start that the tennis team has this year, it points toward a successful year.

JUNIORS WIN LAURELS!

HE hockey season opened on November third with representative teams from the four classes. Each team deserves credit for the good feeling which predominated throughout the season. The girls fought hard for their "W's", but it remained for the Juniors, under the captaincy of Catheline Gildea, to carry away the glories by proving themselves champions of the 1924 season.

The Seniors took their defeat as good sportsmen always do, by giving in gracefully, but not quickly. Led by Emily Foster, they were not easily defeated. The Sophomore team took third place this year, but the games lost by the "Yellow Jackets" were difficult. Their Captain, Louise Burke, ably led hard fought games, which brought them to glorious defeat in the finals.

The Freshmen team did surprisingly well considering that they were battling against veterans who, nevertheless, found that their opponents were not so green as their color indicated.

The following are the members of the Senior Team:

Lena Rosenberg

INTER-CLASS GAMES SENIORS GAIN CHAMPIONSHIP

HE series of inter-class basketball games started March eleventh. The first game played was between the Seniors and Freshmen. This game was fast and interesting throughout. The Seniors, having a stronger team, easily defeated the "Freshies" by a 50-4 verdict.

The next game between the Juniors and Sophomores was close and exciting. Ruth Thompson featured for the Juniors and "Peg" Du Ross for the Sophomores. The latter won by a 17-8 victory.

On March twelfth, the girls played their second game of the season when the Juniors lined up against the Freshmen, and the Seniors against the "Sophs." In the Junior-Freshman game the Juniors defeated the Freshmen by a score of 17-18. The game was close at all times. No one team was certain of a victory until the whistle had blown. Again Miss Thompson featured for the Juniors with seven field goals. The Freshmen played a good game. Miss Daugherty, aided by her center, starred for the Freshies.

The other games played and their results were:

Senior vs. Junior—Senior

Senior vs. Freshman—Senior

Sophomore vs. Junior—Sophomore

After this series of games had been played, the Freshman and Juniors were eliminated from the finals, leaving the Seniors and Sophomores to play the championship game.

The last game was very close. In this game Lena Rosenberg starred for the N 1922 Mr. F. J. Brown formed a J. V. Basketball team with the idea that the Jay Vees would make future Varsity players. The first J. V. team was captained by "Jake" Warner, who proved to be a real leader and piloted his team through the entire season without a defeat except at the hands of Salesianum. The Jay Vees defeated some of the most formidable teams of its class in this vicinity. After such a successful first year, it was decided to organize further the Jay Vee teams.

The second year the Jay Vees started out with the same "line-up" they had had the first year. The players had been together and they kept up the team spirit. "Fritz" Herlihy was elected to captain this second Jay Vee team. Under the guidance of Mr. Brown and the piloting of Captain Herlihy, the team went through their second year of existence without a defeat. This was considered a wonderful record. No other basketball team of the school ever made such a record. The team created a sensation in and around the city by making a record of losing but one game in two years. This was considered an enviable record for a team of the Jay Vee type.

In the third year of their existence most of the first team players of the Jay Vees were promoted to the Varsity team, thereby making it necessary for Coach Brown to form a new team. He did this and made a team that went through the third season without a defeat. This team was lead by H. Holt. Too much credit cannot be given to Coach Brown for the great interest he took in the teams. The spirit of sportsmanship he kept in the teams was remarkable. The spirit of the team kept a fast working combination on the floor. So far the team has won forty-eight games in succession—record no team of the High School has equalled. The summary of the third follows:

(Tune: Madelon)

On the banks of the verdant Brandywine
With its hills and its valleys so sublime
Stands our school as it stood in the days of yore
May it stand so for many ages more.
We, to her history grand and glorious,
Now pledge ourselves for victories new;
Here to the sheltr'ing arm spread o'er us
Wilmington High here's to you!
Raise your voice in song
Cheer the Team along,
Back it to the finish till the game is won.

CHORUS

Wilmington High, we're here to win the game
Wilmington High, all honor to her name.
We will put the ball where it should be
And we'll fight, FIGHT, FIGHT for victory
Wilmington High, we're marching down the field,
Play up the game and never, never yield
Give a cheer and shout her praises high—
WILMINGTON HIGH, WILMINGTON HIGH, WIL-

Alumni Association

URING the month of May or June, the Graduating Class of 1875 of School Number One, Wilmington, Delaware, met at the school for the purpose of forming an alumni association. The purpose of the association was to promote interest in the activities of the school and to perpetuate the memories of the institution.

It is regrettable that this meeting is not on record. For this reason the proceedings other than those mentioned above are unknown. The officers during the first year of organization were as follows: J. H. Rile, President; J. N. Carswell, Vice-President, and J. R. Moore, Secretary. The Executive Committee consisted of H. H. Billany, W. L. Scott, and J. N. Carswell.

The life of the organization has been a hard one. Some years, due to the laxity of its officers, it has ceased to function. In 1912, under the capable leadership of its "live-wire" president, H. C. Mahaffy, the association made a wonderful upward progress. As a result of the untiring efforts of the officers, at the annual reunion in 1913 every graduating class from 1875 to 1913, inclusive, was represented.

Unfortunately the enthusiasm was not permitted to last. As a consequence of the World War the association lay dormant from 1916 to 1922.

On December 9, 1922, a meeting of a committee of forty men was held to reorganize the Alumni Association. The work progressed slowly, but finally the reorganization was effected on October 9, 1923, at a meeting held in Room No. 17 of the Wilmington High School. In May, 1924, the annual reunions were resumed and it is hoped that they will continue through eternity. The success or failure of the organization will depend on the present undergraduates, those who in the future will become Alumni.

The Alumni Association offers two cash prizes each semester. One is given to the boy having the highest average for his four years in English and the other to the boy with the highest average in Manual Training. The association also keeps in close touch with the athletics of the school by being represented on the Athletic Committee by two members.

Alumnae Association

THE purpose of the Alumnae Association is two-fold: educational and social. To further the former, we have given for several years, the sum of one hundred dollars a year to the girl who, in a competitive examination, has stood the highest in her class. The winner has been privileged to select her college.

This year the W. H. S. will graduate its fiftieth class.

In honor of this anniversary the members of the Alumnae decided unanimously to aim to increase its scholarship to five hundred dollars annually. This will enable a High School girl who may be the best in her class, but without funds for college, to secure at least one year of higher education.

The social side is emphasized in our regular meetings (especially our January supper meeting), and our reception to each graduating class.

We hope to include in our membership next year every girl of the class of 1925.

"Dramatics," shouted Ann.

"Why, Ann, what's the matter?" cried Lora in alarm.

"Matter? I don't suppose anything's the matter only when you mentioned dramatics it seemed to strike a cord. I immediately thought of Junior Day and the play we gave."

"Oh! Junior Day," said Lora in an awed tone.

"Yes, I can see everything as plainly now as on THE DAY. You remember Lora, don't you, we all carried white chrysanthemums, as an emblem of innocence and purity I guess, while the Seniors carried yellow ones? How we did flit around the halls clutching those treasured flowers! I tell you I hung on tightly to mine for I wanted everybody to know that I was one of the favored few that day. And oh! when the gong sounded for assembly how we did hurry to get in line, everybody trying to be first and I as usual near the tail end. But my cup ran over when the Lordly Seniors had to remain standing while we Juniors marched into the auditorium to the seats reserved for us in front. And then, too, the play! How delightful it was and how dainty the girls looked in their quaint Quaker garb! No wonder the boys kept their eyes glued to their faces all the time."

"And, Ann," said Lora with eyes shining, for she too well remembered that wonderful day, "how about the Indians? Weren't they fierce looking though and wasn't Miles Standish an overbearing pompous looking fellow? Oh, Ann, I tell you that was a day in a million."

"I agree with you there, Lora. Those were the good old days," said Ann in a slow tone.

HISTORY OF FEBRUARY CLASS '25

Silence reigned supreme for the next few minutes for both were busy with their thoughts.

"How time does fly," Ann sighed at last. "It just seems as if it were yesterday that we went to the High and look at us today. Oh dear, dear!"

"Well, Ann, you know the old saying, 'Time and tide wait for no man?' But don't be so melancholy. Tell me didn't something peculiar happen at the end of our Junior year?"

"Peculiar?"

"Well, maybe that's hardly the word for it, but you know that I mean so many of the boys and girls got a bee in their bonnet to graduate in June instead of February. That certainly did cut a large slice from our class. What with the people who kept flunking and those who doubled up, it's a wonder we had as many graduate as we did! You know there were only ninety-six."

"Yes, I know that, Ann, but we didn't miss those that left our class or flunked, did we now?"

"Miss them! I should say not. It's a wonder we didn't miss ourselves with all the lessons and all the activities going on. Why, don't you remember the very first term we were Seniors we had that home rule business wished on us. Sure enough when the business of entertaining began who was selected to do the entertaining? Yours truly, of course! She, if you please, was put on a debate. When I think of it today I still pity the poor girls who had to listen to it."

"Why, Ann, I think you're unreasonable and I declare I don't know what's the matter with you, one minute you're as jolly as can be and the next you're as comforting as a wet blanket."

"Well, Lora, I admit that I was a bit put out, and I guess that third period class of boys had something to do with it. I verily believe they'd try the patience of an angel."

"There, there, Ann, I'm sorry I spoke as I did. I know boys for I've two of my own and they do try me sometimes. Try to forget them. There's a dear. Why I believe you're smiling. You certainly are queer. Almost ready to cry in one minute and then laughing in the next. Come let me in on the joke."

"Oh, Lora," said Ann in a quivery voice, "do you remember that French play we were in?"

"No wonder you laughed," replied Lora. "You certainly were funny enough to make anyone laugh." Here the two giggled in a manner most unbecoming for a school marm as I've told you Miss Ritzley was, and for her friend Lora, who, by the way, was a young married matron, the mother of two rollicking boys.

"Dear me," said Ann as she wiped her eyes, "dear me."

"Now that you mentioned that play, Ann, do you remember the one that was given at our Senior Reception and the one we gave at Christmas time? You remember the Senior Reception, don't you?"

"I should say I do. That was a good idea, getting the teachers and parents acquainted in that way. I recall I had a jolly time and I guess everybody else did too. Do you imagine the Senior Classes of today still give a reception?"

"I daresay they do. They wouldn't discard a perfectly good idea like that."

"No, they wouldn't, but didn't you say something about the play given at Christmas time?"

"Now, what was the name of that thing? Lora, do you remember?"

"I was just trying to think of it, Ann."

"Oh I have it, Lora. It was The Toy Shop, all about Santa Claus and his toys and the girls were the dolls and the boys clowns and soldiers."

"That's right, so it was. Weren't the girls too sweet for words, the wax dolls especially? I remember Kitty distinctly with her blond curls and blue eyes; she was a dear."

"Lora, I hope you haven't forgotten Anna and Betty as the baby dolls and how funny they were."

"And, Ann, you're not going to omit Butch as the jack-in-the-box."

"Ha, ha! Wasn't he funny though. I tell you, Lora, that play certainly was a hit."

"But the Senior Play that we presented just before Commencement was a bigger hit. You know it was called 'Clarence'."

"'Oh, Clarence!' I can still hear Betty now. Wasn't she a scream?"

"I'll say she was. How time does fly! It doesn't seem possible that all this happened ten years ago."

"But you know it did, Ann, and you can never forget the jolly good times we had."

"'Member the lunch room gang, as Cic called it?"

"Yes . . . Mm . . . let me see. There were Lil and Evelyn and Phil and Cic and you and myself. That made a jolly little crowd. I declare I think we talked and laughed more than we ate."

"The exams, tho! That's the worst part about going to High, but we finally overcame all those obstacles and all we had to do was get our diplomas."

"And when commencement night arrived! Just think we were the first February Class in existence of the school to have our own graduation. I was tickled enough when I heard we were going to have a Senior Play of our own, but when they told me we were going to have a separate graduation it was almost too much. And as I said when that gala night arrived, oh my weren't we excited though? All you could hear was:—

'Do I look all right?'

'Do please pin on my collar for me.'

'I'm so nervous, I know my cap will fall off or I'll trip over my gown when I go up to get my diploma.'

'Oh dear, I wish this night were over.'

'Girls, the music is starting. Get in line.'

"And then," said Lora, "we were all seated and the exercises began. Didn't you enjoy Dr. Trapnell's address? One part I can still remember and that was when he said he shared the torch of life with us, instead of flinging it to us to grapple with alone."

"And, Lora, surely you haven't forgotten the girls' chorus we had?"

"NO, nor the diplomas, those long coveted diplomas that we received,"

"Oh de—— Why, what was that?"

"That, my sweetness, was the clock striking five."

"Five? Gracious. I must fly. What will Frank and the children think of my gabbing like this?"

"Oh come on, have supper with me. Frank and the children can have you every day while think how long it is since I haven't seen you. Please do."

"Truly I'd love to, Ann, but I can't. Ask me some other time."

"Well, if you must, you must," said Ann in a resigned voice. "Bring the kiddies to see me soon."

"THE LAST COURT"

there was one hope, and that it was which sustained the condemned man. "They" had promised to take his case before the pardon board, as a last court—pleading the innocence of the convicted man, his guilt founded only on the evidence of freak circumstance.

Father Dolan entered—placed the tray upon the little table-stool and motioned the warden to leave him alone with the prisoner.

It was many minutes after the great door had slammed closed upon the two men that the old priest broke the silence.

"I—I have news for you, today, Paul," he faltered, half hesitatingly.

Paul slowly raised himself to a sitting position. His dark and sunken eyes brightened—they looked into the unwilling gaze of Father Dolan—they questioned. In them hope had sprung up—last hope—"what"—they seemed to say—"what news?"

The old man faltered—sat down beside the boy and in a clear but unsteady voice said, "My boy—you must be brave—there is no hope!"

Paul sat motionless, staring blankly at the wall. A half smile played about the corners of his mouth as he spoke very softly, "But the pardon, Father—they will," then with a little flush, "Oh, I know they'll——"

"No," interrupted the old man, "the pardon has been refused. You must go this afternoon. I am sorry for you, but," continued the old man pointing upward, "trust Him, my boy, and do not be afraid!"

A moment of stillness passed. It seemed an hour, then, slowly and boldly came the answer, "No—I am not afraid."

"THE LAST COURT"

The voice contained in it a bit of irony—a bit of cynicism perhaps, but it was a different voice, so different that Father Dolan started at the sound of it. The young face seemed stronger than had been—it was marked with an expression of defiance rather than fear—of understanding rather than hatred.

"I see now," he continued, "differently than I did before. I see now what really matters most. Why I am free—free—a free man! Just think of it! I am innocent and the only one in the world who knows or believes it—but who else matters—who else must answer my own conscience?"

So in the moments that followed, as the old man of God and the young man, to die, knelt side by side on the cold flagstones to pray—with the light of the morning sun, there came to the soul of the doomed man a greater light and a fuller understanding than he had ever known.

The soul of man would not look for the truth of life until all hope of mortality had passed. The mind that lived in the world could not know the finer truths of heaven. How wonderful to face one's self clean and satisfied. Is this not the last court to pass sentence that is true. What is life if we transcend it?

At two o'clock on that afternoon, the scaffold trap dropped—the rope snapped taut—a spirit passed. The papers that night proclaimed the execution of a murderer and a criminal, but life's last court, the tribunal of his own conscience, had vindicated him—and man's court of last resort had only set him free.

THOUGHTS AFTER A BELOVED ONE'S DEATH

I know there is little
Use in remembering
Happy things that have gone.
Each tomorrow drags its length in Endless years.
A world of sorrow globes itself
In crystal tears—
Happy memories are like a
Bit of driftwood on the Sea of moonlight—
Like the unborn tiny buds
Sleeping 'neath the sod.
Happiness is as perfume in
A silken scarf
Which long may have lain.
As sunlight on the rose's lips—
Both, briefly reign—
All joys will fade,
Sunlight surely die—
Making winters' dead things
All the more dead.

THE ROSE OF GOLD

icy step to rest, then up and onward, slipping and sliding. Gradually, the snow abated and the sun peeped out, and warmed him. His pack grew lighter, his hunger ceased, and his tired bones stopped aching. He was near the top.

At last he saw the great gate with its devil-peaks. His heart was glad. He was home!

With ease, he broke the rusty lock, and the gate creaked open. He passed up the path of flat stones, past the great bronze bell, and as he passed it gave a little moan of peace and contentment, and he crossed and raised the huge hammer, sending a mighty peal across the valley to announce his arrival. Then he picked up his bundle and went on up the path between dahlia, phlox and marigold bushes. But of all the flowers, only one lived, a single golden "saisei-rose," over which fluttered the first butterfly. And from the shadows of the temple came a rich, dull gold gleam. He was happy. It was his Great Lord Buddha!

He entered the temple by a small side door, and there, in a small alcove, prepared the food that he had brought up the mountain side. Without touching it himself, he carried it into the shrine, to the great statue of gold.

The whole room seemed full of blue-gray smoke. When he lighted the poor little candles upon the altar they seemed to be dim as the ghosts of newly departed spirits. He felt sick! Hungry! Tired! The room whirled. Buddha smiled.

He placed the food at Buddha's great feet, then started to kneel in prayer. A sweet odor pervaded the room. It was the perfume of the "saisei-rose." He started to rise; and, as he rose, he looked up into the face of Buddha! The great golden face of the Lord Buddha smiled. And suddenly the poor priest felt happy. In Buddha's hand was a brighter glint than he had ever noticed before. He reached up and touched it. It was soft. Had anyone committed a sacrilege and placed something in Buddha's hand? He pulled it away. He reeled! He staggered! He could not believe his senses! Here in his temple was the thing he had searched for miles away, the Rose of Gold!

The people in the valley had missed the daily tolling of the bell on the mountain top. What could be the matter? Their curiosity was aroused to such an extent that half the town determined to make a pilgrimage up the mountain. At the top they found the temple deserted. Before the great statue they found the priest dead and in his hand was gold dust.

THE Traffic Squad began the fall term of 1924, with about ninety members under the supervision of Miss Passmore and Mr. Loomis. The scope of the organization's activities and the indispensability of its work have this year come to be greater than at any time since its organization in 1922 by H. J. Ashton, former coach.

It is the duty of every squad member to maintain, by instruction, and example, good conduct among the student body during the passing of classes and lunch periods. They are also stationed at the various entrances in order to receive visitors and escort them to their destination.

In order to become a member of the Traffic Squad a student must have four teachers vouch for his initiative, reliability, scholarship, self-control and courtesy, and above all he must be approved of by Mr. Wagner, Miss Passmore, and Mr. Loomis.

El Circulo Castellano

L CIRCULO CASTELLANO, the Spanish Club of the Wilmington High School, was organized several years ago by Miss Carvin. The aim of the club is to become better acquainted with the customs of the Spanish-speaking people of the world and to learn something of their literature and art. This has been made possible by the members who, at each meeting, have given short talks on topics selected by the club's advisor, Mr. Mestres.

Due to the size of El Circulo Castellano the activities outside the classroom have been few, yet the existence of the club this past semester has promoted a far greater interest in the language.

HI-Y Club

OFFICERS

President FRANCIS SASSE
 Vice-President LEON DE VALINGER, JR.
 Secretary-Treasurer NORMAN W. HILLER
 Y. M. C. A. Advisor CHARLES GROESBECK
 Faculty Advisor RAYMOND C. BALL

HISTORY OF THE HI-Y CLUB

THE history of the Hi-Y Club of North America dates back to a club organized at Iola, Michigan, High School, in 1870. This was known as the High School Young Men's Christian Association.

In purpose and plan it was quite similar to the present Hi-Y Clubs. The idea grew, and today we find a Hi-Y Club at Chapman, Kansas, which dates its growth from 1889. The present national purpose of the Hi-Y movement was adopted in 1913 at the first General Assembly of the Y. M. C. A., held at Culver, Indiana. So far as is known, the first use of the name "Hi-Y Club" in connection with the movement was used by the Cleveland, Ohio, West Side Y. M. C. A. in 1914.

The movement has grown until at the present time there are on record 2,064 Hi-Y Clubs in about 1,700 different high schools, with a membership of 59,161, throughout the United States and Canada.

In the Wilmington High School the Hi-Y Club was first organized in 1917. Since that time it has existed, though at times inactive, and has slowly grown to its present status.

The purpose, the slogan, the dynamic and the objectives of the Hi-Y movement are the essential elements that have given unity, vitality and growth to the organization.

THE PURPOSE—"To create, maintain, and extend throughout the school and community high standards of Christian character."

THE SLOGAN—"Clean living, clean speech, clean athletics, clean scholarship."

THE DYNAMIC—"Contagious Christian character."

THE OBJECTIVES—"Health betterment, mind acquirement, soul enrichment, social advancement, and service achievement."

The local club encourages in the school, health betterment through its interest in athletics, and mind acquirement in its stand for high and clean scholarship. The Bible discussion, which is part of the weekly meeting program, strives toward soul enrichment. In the regular meetings and in the joint meeting with the Girls' Friendship Club, the boys advance in the social aspect of life. The service achievement of the club extends not only in the personal interest of the members in each other, but also to interest in the poor of the community and its homes for boys.

RAYMOND C. BALL.

The Whistacol Club

ON November 13, 1924, a group of thirty-five boys met in Room 27 to organize what has later been named the Whistacol Club.

This is an organization devoted to the hobby of postage stamps, their collection, trade and study. The following officers were elected:

President	HARRY CASTLOW
Vice-President	FORD MILLER
Secretary	SAMUEL BERLIN
Treasurer	JAMES SCHULTZ
Faculty Advisor	J. H. HILLS

The club has met quite regularly each Thursday afternoon. After a brief business session, the meetings are thrown open to a lively market in the trade and sale of stamps. The members of the club exchange duplicates, and discuss the subjects of philately, thereby enriching their collections and knowledge of stamps.

OFFICERS

President	JEANE BRADFORD
Vice-President	BLANCHE HOBBS
Secretary	HELEN BECK
Treasurer	KATHERINE AYRES

N the latter part of September, 1919, a small group of Senior girls organized the Friendship Club. For almost a year it operated entirely as a Y. W. C. A. Club; then it was sanctioned by the faculty of the High School. Miss Fitzwater was elected faculty advisor and from that time up to the present day the Friendship Club has had a definite place in the affairs of W. H. S.

The Friendship Club is a branch of the Girl Reserves and in the programs of the club the three sides of the Girl Reserves triangle—health, knowledge, and spirit—are stressed. The code of the Girl Reserves, their slogan "To face life squarely" and the motto "To find and give the best" form the underlying principles of the Friendship Club, together with its purpose "to be friendly to all girls."

Each term, new and interesting programs are planned. These programs include Father-Daughter Banquets, Faculty Teas, Mother-Daughter Suppers, talks on worthwhile subjects by well-known speakers, musicals and fire-side meetings. The social service side of the program is also emphasized.

The Club organized with about fifteen girls as active members, and now more than a hundred Juniors and Seniors girls look forward eagerly to the Monday meetings at the "Y". Much credit is due Miss Caroline Fitzwater, who has worked very hard to interest the girls and make the club a success.

SENATUS POPULUS QUE ROMANUS

QUITE new and unique club was started at the High School in September, namely the Latin Club. It is recognized by the letters S. P. Q. R. The club was organized with the hope of strengthening the student's interest in the Latin language and in the customs of the Roman people during the time of Cicero, Caesar and Virgil, and to a great measure it has succeeded. Every meeting has been as near like a true Roman affair as possible. At our first meeting we divided the "citizens of the Roman State" into tribes and then into centuries according to their wealth (of knowledge). After the auspices had been consulted and the election bugles blown, each century was allowed one vote. We have had various instructive and interesting games. At one meeting we played Latin Games. At another an amusing Latin play and a picturesque vestal virgin drill were presented. Our largest affair of the term was a Saturnalia (Christmas) Party given for the members of the club and faculty advisors of the club. Everything was in true Roman style, even the refreshments. Everyone enjoyed these exceedingly. Altogether, the Latin Club has certainly been and will be a great asset to the Latin department.
